WHY KINDLE A CAMPFIRE WHEN YOU CAN IGNITE AN INFERNO?

The SPELLFIRE® Card Game is one of champions, wizards, and monsters wielding power over realms from the ADVANCED DUNGEONS & DRAGONS® game. It's fast as prairie fire, hot as star fire, and dangerous as cross fire. And now's the time to ignite your game—the 4th Edition Starter Deck is explosive, with 300 all-new cards in a set of 520 designed to blast you right into the forge.

Want more fuel? Throw the new DRAconomicon booster pack in; that's 125 more new cards featuring all things draconian to fan the flames.

If you're going to play with fire, don't just settle for a spark!

SPELLFIRE®: Master the Magic Card Game, 4th Edition Starter Deck
TSR #1127
Sug. Retail $9.95; CAN $14.95; £6.99 U.K. incl. VAT
ISBN 0-7869-0210-8

SPELLFIRE DRAconomicon Booster Pack, Set 10
TSR #1156
12 out of 125 new cards featuring all kinds of dragons!
Sug. Retail $2.50; CAN $3.50; £1.99 U.K. incl. VAT
ISBN 0-7869-0629-4

To find the store nearest you call toll-free 1-800-384-4TSR. Questions? Call Rob Taylor at 414-248-2902.
It took a dragon to cram all this on one CD-ROM

The Advanced Dungeons & Dragons® CD-ROM Core Rules includes:

- 3D map maker—an exclusive way to create maps with all the AD&D® conventions, and then render them into 3D!
- Character generator—a complete generation system based on the Player's Handbook rules.
- Encounter generator—random monsters, and you can put them on your own maps!
- Treasure generator—any type, any size treasure can be created in a few mouse clicks.
- Monstrous Manual™ database—and it's customizable, too!
- Player's Handbook
- Dungeon Master's Guide
- Tome of Magic
- Arms and Equipment Guide
- And more!

Jump on the AD&D CD-ROM Core Rules demo in the July issue!

Get the demo on the internet at ftp.mpgn.com/Gaming/ADND/CD-ROM-demo

On sale in September!
Remember when "Well, hey, I didn’t spend all those years playing Dungeons & Dragons® and not learn a little something about courage."

There it was, on national television. When The X-Files busts on your favorite game, you have to wonder just how far beyond “arrived” it’s come.

It’s OK, though. We gamers laughed the loudest. Sure, it would have been more flattering if the guy who’d said the line wasn’t such a freak. But it was funny, and it made me realize that we’re safe at last. Fantasy role-playing games, especially the AD&D® game, are obviously here to stay.

I had been getting a bit worried in the 80’s. The cool kids had me nervous.

You know who they are—the ones with the desperate need to prove they liked something before it was cool, thus proving they they are hipper than thou. It’s usually about bands. “They were great when they played clubs, but now they’ve sold out.”

Of course, “sold out” usually means “became popular.” (And by that token, no rpg has “sold out” more than the AD&D game.) The cool kids won’t be seen at an REM concert, but they won’t shut up about having “been there” when the band was doing the college circuit.

You see a similar thing among gamers, especially ex-gamer cool kids who won’t be seen indulging in a role-playing game today but really want you to know that they were playing back before you ever heard of beholders.

“I started with the first edition hardcover.”

“That’s nothing. I started with the blue box basic set.”

“Oh yeah? Well, back in my day, all we had were three little booklets — and no modules!”

There’s nothing wrong with fond reminiscences, and there’s nothing wrong with the accumulation of some of these anecdotes into such tall tales as rival any in-character tavern talk. The difference is in whether you still play the game or just want people to know that you did, once.

There’s something satisfying about having “been there” at the beginning, even if all you were doing was playing a game that thousands of others were also playing (or listening to a band that ends up all over MTV a few years later). The phenomenon ranges from quarrels over who’s been playing longer to meandering reminiscences best saved for years spent in an old gamer’s home. But all this business is a good sign; it means we’ve got a history, and a pretty long one at that.

Remember when the first Dragonlance® modules came out, and everybody quarreled about who would play Raistlin? Remember when Unearthed Arcana arrived and we all rolled up barbarians and cavaliers because they were so tough? (And we still cheated on the die rolls, despite the new method.) Remember the dice that came in the original basic set? The four-siders were like caltrops. Step on one, even wearing sneakers, and you were in a world of hurt.

Well, sure. Some of us remember that stuff. Some of us don’t, or maybe have only heard about the “old days” in the wistful and tiresome musings of the old guard. It’s great that you meet players who know everything there is to know about Drizzt or Elminster but stare blankly when you talk about White Plume Mountain or the Tomb of Horrors. It means that the hobby is alive with new players, that we’re not all aging veterans quibbling over which of the hardcovers was released first.

The best thing is that when it comes down to the game itself, it doesn’t matter how long you’ve been playing. A veteran of 15 years and a newcomer to the game will both have the same reminiscences a few years from now: “Remember when we played The Night Below, and your paladin started the fight with that gigantic...”
The Master Thief
Karl Garrison
When you're the best you are at what you do, how can you get any better?

Page 8

The Thief Who Came in from the Cold
Renee Stern
Tired of picking pockets? Sick of running from the law? Well, when you can't beat 'em...

Page 14

The Spying Game
Michael T. Kuciak
A player's primer to the game of spying — but be ready to play for keeps.

Page 20

Defilers & Preservers
Bill Slavicsek
Six powerful new wizard kits for the devastated lands of Athas.

Page 40

Why Spy?
Larry Granato
"The name is Bond..."

Page 26
Wyrms of the North
Ed Greenwood
Beware when this lonely dragon asks you up for a bite.
Page 32

The Game Wizards:
DRAGONLANCE™: FIFTH AGE™
Sue Weinlein Cook
The world of Krynn is back, this time with a dramatic new game system.
Page 76

DRAGON DICE™ GAME:
Something Wild
Dori Hein & Bill Olmesdahl
The feral are ready to run rampant through the armies of your opponents.
Page 96

The AD&D® CD-ROM Demo
Steve Winter
The greatest gaming innovation since, well, the character sheet, graph paper, the Player's Handbook, the DMG . . .
Page 58

The Measure of the Home Guard
(DRAGONLANCE®: Tales of the Fifth Age)
J. Robert King
In the wake of the second cataclysm, an unlikely knight comes to Whitestone Glade.
Dear DRAGON® Magazine,

I have recently been reading all of my old FORGOTTEN REALMS® books that I’d boxed up and put away. I was reading the second book in my favorite series, the Finder’s Stone Trilogy, entitled The Wyvernspur. When I came across something interesting. One chapter contained a description of a card game that Giogi Wyvernspur and his friends were playing, called “Elemental Empires.”

I was wondering whether TSR has had, or due to my letter, now has any ideas of developing this into a real game. In today’s world of overpriced collectible card games, it would be a real pleasure to be able to play a fantasy-based card game without having to spend $200 on packs and packs of cards. I’m sure that I, as well as many of my friends, would be interested in a one-system similar to this. Please tell me whether you are planning on doing this, so I can find a place to box up all my Magic cards!

Ian Robert Wells
Westford, MA

While there are currently no plans to produce “Elemental Empires,” card games inspired by AD&D® game settings aren’t new. For some interesting “in-setting” card games, you might try using the Talis deck from the Tales of the Lance boxed set for the FORGOTTEN REALMS® setting or the Tarokka deck from the revised RAVENTOF campaign boxed set. The Talis deck had at least a little influence in the design of the upcoming DRAGONLANCE®: FIFTH AGE™ game, which uses (non-collectible) cards rather than dice for creating characters and resolving actions. Also, back in issue #210, Bill Connors described a very nifty game for use with the Tarokka deck. Check ’em out.

Dear DRAGON Magazine,

I just read the annual “April Fools” issue, and I must admit that I laughed until I cried! It surpassed last year’s by far. This issue was special to me because my campaign, which began in 1987, thrives on humor. Sure, you can’t play the AD&D® game without some seriousness, but the humor keeps us going.

For the first time, we’re using a new group of characters, starting at first level. Giving the new PCs strange things to fight on their first adventure, like chia golers and flumphs, will give us something to remember. To add even more to the fire, we have a tendency to use a wide variety of races and classes, usually the most unique. If there’s anything the average gamer/writer can do to get something submitted to DRAGON® Magazine (with a twist of humor), let me know. I’ve got a lot of ideas. Keep up the good work!

Chris Dickinson
Mineral Ridge, OH

Getting any article into the magazine is just a matter of writing a good one and submitting it. Well, there are a few other steps, starting with sending us a query, but those are covered by the writers, guidelines that anyone can receive for the price of a business-sized SASE. We like humorous articles too, but we’ll save most of them for April.

Dear DRAGON Magazine,

I am very satisfied with the new format. Your magazine is very helpful to all DMs. Unfortunately, I rarely DM. With the people in my group, the ratio of DMs to players is about 3:12.

It would be great if you included more information for players every issue, like new spells, equipment, kits, and even new races. The fireworks spells article in issue #227 was good, but that was just about the only resource for players in the entire magazine. My favorite class is the wild mage, and I would love to see more wild magic spells. Could you print an article on wild mages? If not, do you know where I could find more wild magic spells?

I loved the gangster’s article in #228, and the artwork was great. Keep up the excellent work.

Sincerely,
Andy Hartwell
via e-mail

You’ve got it, Andy. While we’ll still publish articles for the DM, we know that most of our readers are players (naturally). You’ll see more and more articles with spells, magical items, weapons, character kits, proficiency, and anything else a player could want in the coming months. We’ll include something on wild mages as soon as we see a really good article for them.

As for the gangsters of the Underdark, our sources in the Waterdeep Watch tell us to keep an eye out for another group of them, maybe around, say, next April.

Dear DRAGON Magazine,

1. How many volumes will be in the Wizard’s Spell Compendium?
2. When can players expect a set of Priest spells? How many volumes will make up its set of compendiums?
3. Does TSR have plans to publish updates to the ENCYCLOPEDIA MAGICA series with updates on the new magical items, artifacts, and relics published since the set was released?
4. Will TSR publish further Arcane Age products that deal with lost empires other than Netheril?
5. What happened to Dale Henson? I noticed he went from Slade (with a capital S) to slade (with a lower case s). I hope he didn’t suffer some sort of game trauma.

Thanks,

Conrad Geist
Ft. Morgan, CO

Since the ENCYCLOPEDIA MAGICA™ tome compiled by slade were so popular, you can bet we’ll see a priests spells compendium.

made payable to TSR, Inc., or charges to valid MasterCard or VISA credit cards; send subscription orders with payments to TSR, Inc., P.O. Box 5895, Boston MA 02206, U.S.A. In the United Kingdom, methods of payment include cheques or money orders made payable to TSR Ltd., or charges to a valid ACCESS or VISA credit card; send subscription orders with payments to TSR Ltd., as per that address above. Prices are subject to change without prior notice. The issue expiration of each subscription is printed on the mailing label of each subscriber’s copy of the magazine. Changes of address for the delivery of subscription copies must be received at least six weeks prior to the effective date of the change in order to assure uninterrupted delivery.

Submissions: All material published in DRAGON Magazine becomes the exclusive property of the publisher, unless special arrangements to the contrary are made prior to publication. DRAGON Magazine welcomes unso-
The trick, as Skip Williams pointed out last month in “Sage Advice,” is that there’s no way of telling how many volumes either the wizard or priest series will be until the spells are compiled. Jon Pickens is hard at work on the Wizard’s Spell Compendium even now, so we should have some idea soon. As for Encyclopædia Magica Updates, all we can say right now is “maybe.”

In addition to the Arcane Age boxed set written by slade with Jim Butler, we’ll see three Arcane Age novels by Clayton Emery and an 64-page adventure entitled How the Mighty Are Fallen, also by slade. While the details are still, well, arcane, future Arcane Age projects are on the drawing board.

As for slade himself he’s still recovering from the freak typographical accident that cost him his earlier names, the therapy is promising, and we visit him on Tuesdays and Saturdays to pick up his manuscripts.

Dear DRAGON Magazine,

When I read the “Game Wizards” section of DRAGON Magazine #226, I wept. Finally an engine that incorporates all known rules into a DM’s playing aid! I’ve been trying to program the same concept through a course I’m taking, but I am continually cutting corners if I want to have any sort of a tangible product ready for a final grade. Such a sweet program I would gladly purchase, but the timing is off. Within two months I’ll be shipping out to basic training for the Air Force, and then to Keesler Mississippi for Tech school, and I have no clue when I will ever see another breathing role-player, or if I’ll even have access to a computer.

The nit-picker within me cannot help but ask questions: 1) what system does the software use — the PLAYER’S OPTION™ rules or the 2nd Edition rules? 2) Do the character creation tables include non-human races and their modifiers, such as from the Complete Book of Humanoids? 3) What spells and kits are included in the core setup? 4) Will additional software allow for new rules expansions, new spells, items, monsters, proficiencies, kits, etc? 5) Is it net compatible? Could a DM run a gaming session over the phone lines with the options available? If not, then why not set up a huge net AD&D game, perhaps in the style of the Ultima Underworld* games?

All other thoughts aside, I am overjoyed that someone actually took the time and effort to create such a terribly useful tool. A warm thanks to TSR and especially to the dataslaves at Evermore, who made this wonder possible.

Nicholas Drozda
Pittsburgh, PA

While the AD&D CD-ROM doesn’t do quite everything you ask (that would require multiple full wishes), more AD&D computer products are on their way. We’ll let you know more about them nearer to their release dates. In the meantime, check out the box below and the demo disk in this issue for the answer to your questions. And don’t worry about finding fellow gamers in the military — there are plenty. Some may even let you use their computers.

Your Free AD&D® CD-ROM Demo

If you don’t have a CD-ROM drive and Windows 3.1 or Windows 95, this issue includes a free AD&D coaster.

If you do have Windows, check out the free demo of the AD&D Core Rules CD-ROM coming out in September. But first, read the accompanying article on page 50, along with the sleeve of the CD-ROM disk. Be sure to take a look at the README.TXT file to learn of any last-minute changes to the software.

To be sure you can sample all the features of the demo disk, try to play it as an audio CD first in your CD-ROM drive. If you hear sound, everything’s fine. If you don’t, you probably won’t be able to use the Wizard function in the demo (it’ll lock up your system and make you reboot), but the other features will still work.
The thief is one of the most interesting and versatile classes in the AD&D® game, especially at low to mid-levels. With his great variety of skills and his rapid advancement, he usually has no problem keeping pace with other members of an adventuring party.

Higher levels present more of a challenge. High-level wizards can imitate many of the thief’s skills by using certain spells. In addition, a thief’s skills reach maximum values at specific levels.

The game gives rules for advancing characters to 20th level. This is about when the average thief character will max out his skills. Not all campaigns end at 20th level, however. The FORGOTTEN REALMS® Adventures Sourcebook, for example, gives rules allowing characters to advance to 30th level and provides expanded spell tables for wizards and priests. Warrior characters also should have plenty to do beyond 20th level. In addition to gaining three hit points with each level, they still gain one weapon and one nonweapon proficiency every three levels. Beyond 20th level, the only thing thieves receive is a reduced number of skill points every level; something they cannot use if their skills are maxed out.

Once a thief character’s skills reach maximum values, nothing more may be done with his skill points. Other than a few hit points and proficiencies, there is very little difference between a 20th-level thief and a 30th-level thief.

This article suggests a more sensible method of determining a thief character’s maximum skill scores, new uses for skill points, and creative uses for one often-overlooked ability of the thief class: using scrolls.

The thief in shining armor

Thief Player: Now that my character’s skills are all at 95%, what happens to the extra points?

DM: They’re lost, I guess.

Thief: What if he were to start wearing his suit of studded leather armor? That would lower his scores below 95, so he wouldn’t lose any points, right?

DM: That makes sense.

Thief: Will you let me use that table in The Complete Thief’s Handbook that gives the penalties to thief skills for every type of armor? He could then wear that suit of +4 splint mail that the party found. It would take several levels to bring his skills back up, but it would be worth it.

DM: [sighing deeply] What would he do when his skills were at 95% again?

Thief: He’d start wearing plate mail, I guess.

DM: Shoot me now, please.

The Player’s Handbook states that “no skill may be raised above 95%, including all adjustments for Dexterity, race, and armor.” The above example shows how some players could try to avoid this restriction. For most DMs, this is simply unacceptable. It is ridiculous to assume that even the most accomplished thief could be stealthy in bulky metal armor. Of course, the DM can simply disallow all nonstandard armors for thieves, but that would address only part of the problem. How about a thief with a Dexterity of 9? Does it make sense that he could eventually be as skilled as a nimble halfling thief with a Dexterity of 19?
I suggest that DMs require their thief players to keep track of two sets of scores: their base scores (the score without adjusting for Dexterity, race, or armor worn), and their actual scores (after adjustments). The rule on page 38 could be revised to read, “The thief’s base scores may not exceed 95%, and a thief character may never have a greater than 95% chance of success when using a skill, regardless of his actual score.” In this manner, a thief character’s scores may max out above or below 95%, depending on the circumstances. In the former case, any situational penalties to an attempt at a skill would be subtracted from the character’s actual score, which could very well be over 95% (see Example 2).

Example 1

Ragnar, a thief who likes to wear plate mail, has a base score of 95% for his Move Silently skill. His Dexterity of 18 gives him an additional +10%. However, wearing plate mail gives him a whopping -80%, making his actual score 25% (95 + 10 = 105%; 105 - 80 = 25%). (See Table 38, on page 115 of The Complete Thief’s Handbook for thief skill adjustments for all armor types.) Since his base score is maxed out, he may not increase his actual score beyond 25%.

Example 2

Dara, a halfling thief with a 19 Dexterity, has a base score of 95% for her Open Locks skill. She receives a +20% for her Dexterity and a +5% for her race, making her actual score 120%. When attempting to open an ordinary lock, her chance of success would be 95%, since this is the maximum. However, if she were to try to pick a lock without the aid of tools to which she is accustomed, she would still have a 60% chance of success, since the penalty is subtracted from her actual score of 120% (120 - 60 = 60%).

New thief skills

As previously stated, an average thief character’s skills reach their maximum values sometime around 20th level. Even before this time, however, a thief player may wish to find other uses for his skill points. Certain skills may be virtually useless to different types of thieves, so a player may not wish to devote any points to them. What use does a wilderness-loving bandit have for his Open Locks skill? Why would a simple thug learn the Read Languages skill? An accomplished burglar may consider himself above picking Pockets.

For these reasons, high-level thieves should be allowed, at the DM’s option, to learn new skills. These skills may be invented by the player or the DM, or borrowed from another source, such as the Dark Sun® Dragon Kings sourcebook. This option should be available only to single-classed thieves of fairly high level (at least 14th).

Note: The Dragon Kings sourcebook describes six new skills available to Athasian thieves once they reach 21st level: Detect Magic, Detect Illusion, Forge Document, Bribe Official, Dig Tunnel, and Escape Bonds. A few of these may be appropriate to other campaign settings as well. Five of them appear in the Player’s Option™: Skills & Powers book, as well as in the Dungeon Master® Option: High-Level Campaigns book.

When designing new skills for the thief class, the following guidelines should be kept in mind:

- No skill should grant a thief character magical or superhuman powers. Although a Turn Invisible skill would no doubt benefit the character greatly, it is outside the scope of the thief class.

- The skill should somehow relate to the goals of the thief class. (It must relate to breaking and entering, theft, stealth, evasion, scouting, or information gathering.) If the thief character has a kit, the new skill may relate to the kit’s goals.

- The level of difficulty of a new skill should be in proportion with the existing thief skills. A Run Silently skill, for example, would be too powerful and make the Move Silently skill useless.

Once the new skill’s effects and limitations have been described, the DM must decide the base score for the skill, as well as racial, Dexterity, and armor worn adjustments. If the new skill is similar to an existing skill, that skill may be used as a guideline.

If the skill is taken from another source, such as the aforementioned Dragon Kings sourcebook, the DM must determine if any changes need to be made to the skill due to the setting or the DMs preference.

Example 3

Orion, thief and spy extraordinaire, wishes to learn more about languages so that he can learn the gist of a new language quickly when spying upon different types of creatures or while he is in foreign lands. The new skill would be called Linguistics.

A thief character using Linguistics would have to have heard at least an hour of spoken conversation in the language in question before attempting this skill (either all at once, or in segments). Any time afterward, if the thief attempts to understand or engage in a conversation in that language, he must make a skill check.

Failure either means that the thief doesn’t understand what is being said or that he does not know the correct words to respond. Each conversation in that language requires a separate skill check, since it likely contains different words.

Since Linguistics is similar to the Read Languages skill, the DM decides to use it as a model, giving it the same Dexterity, racial, and armor worn adjustments as read languages. However, since the thief class already has some knowledge of languages, the DM sets the base score for Linguistics at 15%, rather than 0%.

Example 4

The DM decides he likes the Escape Bonds skill from the Dragon Kings sourcebook, so he sets up a scenario for Zarkin, a PC gnomish thief, to learn the skill for himself.

The DM tells the player that the circus is in town and that one act in particular sounds interesting. The performer allows the audience to tie him up, then promises that he will be free in one hour. Sure enough, Zarkin (who somehow manages to wind up in jail every other adventure) decides to don a disguise and talk to the performer after the show, beseeching him to reveal his secrets. The performer refuses, however, saying that his principles do not allow him to teach his art to anyone, since it could be used for dishonest purposes. After Zarkin waves a large ruby (worth 5,000 gp) under his nose, the performer decides to relax his principles a bit.

The DM copies all of the relevant information about the skill from the Dark Sun Dragon Kings sourcebook, including description, base score, and adjustments due to Dexterity, race, and armor worn. Since there are no gnomes on Athas, the DM must decide the gnomish modifier for this skill. He decides that gnomes are small and nimble like halflings but that they do not possess their legendary knack for most thief skills. Halflings receive a +10% bonus to the escape bonds skill, so he makes the gnomish modifier +5%.
How it works

To learn a new skill, the thief character must be single-classed and at least 14th level. He must either find a tutor who already knows the skill or devise a way to teach it to himself (DM's discretion). He must spend 15 of his skill points to purchase the skill, after he gains a level. The score starts at its base value, plus Dexterity, racial, and armor worn adjustments. The thief may use his remaining skill points to add to the new skill, or he may spend them on any other skill.

The new skill is treated as any other thief skill, subject to the same rules and limitations (e.g., no more than 15 points may be devoted to the skill each level, etc.).

Other skills

Thieves must learn many skills to be successful. Many rogue nonweapon proficiencies are similar to thief skills, so DMs may wish to allow thief characters to purchase a one-slot nonweapon proficiency from the rogue group at the cost of 15 skill points, or a two-slot proficiency at the cost of 30 skill points. Such a character may not, however, acquire two separate one-slot nonweapon proficiencies, nor may he purchase a new proficiency at the same level he acquires a new thief skill.

As with buying new thief skills, this option should only be available to single-classed thief characters of at least 14th level.

A new look at an old thief skill: scroll use

At 10th level, the thief gains the ability to read wizard and priest scrolls. The only drawback to this ability is that thieves suffer a 25% chance of reversing the spell's effect in a detrimental way every time they do so.

A generous DM may allow thief characters to improve their proficiency with scrolls, reducing their chance of failure. This would cost 15 skill points, as well as require extensive training by a wizard (finding a suitable tutor could be an adventure in itself!). After the training is complete, his chance of failure would be reduced to 15%, just like a bard.

The thief is better off using scrolls that aid in escape, disguise, and diversion, rather than direct offense. A misread teleport scroll could simply take him where he hadn't intended, whereas a malfunction with a meteor swarm scroll could end up blasting him and his companions, rather than his target.

In some cases, a thief character may not even know whether the scroll was read properly, since the effects may not be readily apparent. For example, if he casts explosive runes on a document, he would not know whether it worked unless he read the document himself (and triggered the explosion). The DM may allow a thief character with the Spellcraft proficiency to know when he's misread a scroll, if he makes a successful proficiency check.

Below is a brief list of wizard and priest spells that are of special interest to thief characters. It is far from complete, listing only a few of the possibilities.

Wizard spells

First level

Armor: Gives the thief protection, but he still gains the benefits of wearing no armor.

Change self: Great for a quick disguise.

Find familiar: The DM may wish to restrict this spell to wizards. If not, having an animal companion could be a great asset to the thief by scouting for him, or even helping him steal small items. (Page 112 of The Complete Thief's Handbook shows various uses a thief character may have for animal assistants.) In addition, the familiar bestows the thief with its sensory power, as described on page 134 of the Player's Handbook.

If one of the familiar's sensory powers is good hearing, then the thief gains a bonus to his Detect Noise skill. This bonus can be anywhere between +5% and +30%, depending on the nature of the familiar. If the thief already has a bonus to this skill due to his race, then the higher of the two bonuses should be used. (Do not add them.)

Identify: If the thief does not have access to a guild wizard, he can use this spell to identify magical treasures himself. If he were to take the item to some other wizard, the wizard could recognize the item as "hot" and report the thief!

Phantasmal force: Great all-purpose spell for diversions, concealment, etc. He may not use the spell when fleeing, however, since the illusion requires concentration to maintain.

Sleep: Excellent for quietly taking care of guards and the like. Even if this spell misfires, the thief won't be put to sleep — he is too high level.

Second level

Darkness, 15' radius: Although this may seem like a great way to hide, a huge circle of absolute blackness is more likely to attract attention than to divert it.

Deeppockets: Excellent way to grab a large amount of loot without becoming encumbered or attracting notice by leaving with bulging pockets.

Fool's gold: Not much needs to be said about this spell, except that the thief had better spend the fake money while wearing a good disguise!

Improved phantasmal force: See phantasmal force. This spell lasts two rounds after the thief ceases concentration, possibly giving him a head start if he flees.

Invisibility: This spell, along with the thief's Move Silently skill, allows him to travel unnoticed nearly anywhere.

Rope trick: Presto, instant hiding place!

Web: is great for slowing pursuers, but if the spell malfunctions, the thief could find himself in a sticky situation.

Third level

Spectral force: See phantasmal force. This spell lasts three rounds after the thief ceases concentration, possibly giving him time to get away.

Wraithform: As described in the Player's Handbook, the caster moves without a sound through the tiniest cracks in walls and doors. Due to his wispy, insubstantial nature, the DM may also grant the thief a +25% bonus to his Hide in Shadows skill while in wraithform. This spell is ideal for spying, but not for theft or surprise attacks, since he is completely insubstantial.

Fourth level

Dimension door: Great for escaping in a hurry. A malfunction may mean that the thief arrives where he hadn't intended, but at least he's somewhere else!

Improved invisibility: See invisibility. Since this spell does not end after an attack has been made, the thief can backstab an opponent and still escape invisibly.

Fifth level

Advanced illusion: See phantasmal force. This spell lasts several rounds and does not require concentration, allowing the thief to take other actions.

Cloudkill: This is one of the few offensive spells that may be used safely by thieves, since a malfunction would not slay the thief, even if he were caught in the middle. (He is too high level.)

Shadow door: This allows the thief to escape with a dramatic flair.

Teleport: See dimension door. This spell allows a wider range of destinations, but is considerably more risky.

Sixth level

Contingency: If the thief has another wizard (not priest) scroll handy, he can attempt to link it to a contingency spell, just as a wizard could. Note that he would have to avoid malfunction of both the contingency scroll and the scroll to be linked to the contingency.

Death spell: Like sleep and cloudkill, the thief needn’t worry about being affected if the scroll malfunctions, since he is too high level.

Enchant an item: Making magic items is a special ability of wizards and should not be possible for thieves, even if they have an enchant an item scroll.

Mislead: Another great spell for quick escapes.

Tenser’s transformation: Since thieves generally have more hit points than wizards, this spell can be very effective when used by a thief character. He still may attack only with a dagger or staff, however, even if he is proficient with better weapons.

Seventh level

Duo-dimension: When viewed from the front, a thief using this spell is completely invisible, even to a detect invisibility spell. This makes the spell handy in special situations, such as sneaking into a tower occupied by a paranoid wizard. It also allows him to fit through narrow cracks.

Limited wish: This spell has nearly endless possibilities for a thief character. He should be careful of what he wishes, since the opposite could come true if the scroll malfunctions.

Teleport without error: See dimension door. This spell allows for a nearly endless range of destinations.

Ninth level

Foresight: A handy spell to use when breaking into a heavily trapped or warded area.

Wish: See limited wish.

Priest spells

First level

Cure light wounds: The thief would be ill-advised to use healing scrolls, since a malfunction would wound the recipient instead of healing him. Conversely, if the thief used a cause light wounds scroll on an enemy, and it malfunctioned, the enemy might be healed. (The latter would not be a problem if the opponent were not injured, however.)

Detect snares and pits: This spell allows the thief to detect large pits, snares, and deadfalls that he normally would not be able to find. (Find/Remove Traps allows the detection of only small traps and alarms.)

Entangle: Another way for the thief to slow pursuers.

Invisibility to animals: Getting by guard animals is a breeze with this spell.

Pass without trace: Nearly perfect for thieves, since the recipient of this spell cannot be tracked by any conventional means, including dogs and rangers.

Second level

Barkskin: As with armor, this spell allows the thief to be protected but still gain the bonuses to his thief skills as if he were wearing no armor.

Silence, 75’ radius: Provides a blanket of silence around an area if the thief must perform a noisy action, like springing a trap or backstabbing a guard.

Third level

Meld into stone: This spell provides an excellent hiding place for the thief, but only for a short duration.

Water breathing: With this spell, the thief could hide underwater or even plunder realms below the waves.

Fourth level

Cure serious wounds: See cure light wounds.

Free action: This gives the thief freedom of movement, even when impeded by web spells and the like, making him more difficult to capture.

Plant door: Like meld into stone, this spell provides a temporary hiding place for the thief, with a longer duration than the former spell.

Tongues: Great for spies, since the spell grants perfect fluency in any language, along with the proper accent. The only drawback is the spell’s brief duration.

Fifth Level

Cure critical wounds: See cure light wounds.

Raise dead: If an adventuring party has only one priest capable of casting raise dead, and he dies, then a thief character might try to revive him with a raise dead scroll. This could be risky, however, since a malfunction could have a very nasty side-effect, such as the complete destruction of the corpse.

Sixth level

Heat: See cure light wounds. A thief who is close to death might consider using this scroll, since a malfunction would not kill him, but rather leave him with between one and four hit points.

Word of recall: This is possibly the greatest escape spell a thief can use. The thief reads a scroll beforehand and needs only to utter a single word to activate the spell, returning him to a safe place.

Seventh Level

Resurrection: See raise dead.

!By Bill Cavalier

Karl Garrison has cleverly concealed his identity from the DRAGON® Magazine staff, proving his expertise in the field of which he has written.
"The Finest in Gaming & Hobby Supplies"

One of the World's Largest Suppliers of Magic: The Gathering™

We have lots of cards in stock including: Revised, Foreign and Out-of-Print.
Retailers, Inquiries Welcome!

ICE AGE

It has been many centuries since the war between Vrak and Kishara. The battered landscape has become a frozen desert, defending itself against both the brutal forces of nature and the attacks of nomadic tribes that have emerged in the surrounding wastelands. And through it all, a twisted necromancer flourishes in the deep winter, intent on using his powers to keep the world dark and cold. You may have the skills to survive, but do you have the spirit to withstand the icy wilderness of Dominaria's Ice Age? You can play Ice Age by itself or as a standard expansion for Magic: The Gathering™.

ALLIANCES Magic: The Gathering™

As the age of Ice Recedes, Dominaria wakes from its long, cold sleep. Its people face a world torn by natural and political storms, and they must join forces if they are to survive the coming years. For Dominaria, it is a season of struggle, an era of hope, but most of all, a time for new Alliances.

On the Internet? E-Mail orders to Armeast@aol.com

Corporate Headquarters • 1101 Greenwood Road • Baltimore MD 21208 • Toll Free Phone (800) NOW-GAME • Toll Free FAX (800) 296-DICE
The Armory / West • 1839 Dimming Way • Sparks NV 89431 • (702) 356-1873 • FAX (702) 356-2157 • Toll Free Phone (800) 244-3423
The Armory / Europe • Unit 33 • 632 Radford Rd • Nottingham • NG7 7EP • 011-59-422-289

800-NOW-GAME (East) / 800-BIG-DICE (West)

Armory Sponsors - United States

CA • Anaheim Hills • Galactic Archives • 693-0673
CA • Colton • All-Star Games and Hobbies • 925-5706
CA • Diamond Bar • All-Star Games • 938-4700
CA • Garden Grove • Brookhurst Hobbies • 636-3580
CA • Long Beach • The House • 424-3150
CA • Redding • Collector's Corner • 246-2370
CT • Terrington • Smokey Joe's Comics & Cards • 457-6157
DE • Frederica • Frederica Hardware • 335-9719
FL • Dunedin • Camelot Books & Games • 528-4794
FL • Miami • Sunshine Role-Players • 254-1250
FL • Orlando • The Travelling Mage • 325-7942
FL • Sunrise • Comic & Gaming Exchange • 740-0777
GA • Statesboro • Galaxy's Comics & Games • 681-2597
IL • Chicago • Castle Books • 528-4327
IL • Champaign • Bear Productions • 395-6806
IN • Muncie • Wizard Keep • 285-5145
MA • Boston • Compleat Strategists • 267-2451
MD • Baltimore • Armory Game Shop • 402-8000
MD • Ellicott City • The Dugout Cards & Comics • 461-9664
MD • Forestville • Simulation Center • 736-7748
MD • Waldorf • Smallwood Video Center • 648-1981
ME • Aroostook • Rider's Hobby Shop • 800-JPD-3779
MI • Grandview • Mystical Realms • 763-5075
MO • Washington • The Gamers Den • 238-4429
NC • Greensboro • Cosmic Castle • 884-9008
NJ • Burlington • Burlington Hobbies, Inc. • 385-0044
NJ • Milltown • Game Masters Ltd. • 796-7777
NJ • Freehold • Allied Hobbies • 662-2626
NJ • Ledgewood • Hero Town • 927-0044
NJ • Trenton • Comic Lair • 695-8855
NJ • Voorhees • Edsel Hobbies, Inc. • 772-1268
NY • Las Vegas • Augment Games • 958-3289
NY • Nanuet • Paperwork Exchange • 663-6600
NY • New York • Compleat Strategists #1 • 685-3820
NY • New York • Compleat Strategists #2 • 582-1272
NY • New York • Comp. Strat. Rockefeller Center • 265-4494
NY • Poughkeepsie • Dragon's Den • 914-471-1401
NY • Rochester • Crazy Eyed's • 427-2190
NY • Sayville • Queen Street Tales • 244-8770
OH • Athens • Athens Book Center • 992-4865
OH • North Ridgeville • Amazing Diversions • 327-1083
OH • Toledo • Glass City Games • 474-8304
OR • Portland • Adam's Family • 294-1767
PA • Eustis • Plaza Hobbies Inc. • 353-6969
PA • Glendale • Fudgeman's • 887-4416
PA • King of Prussia • Compleat Strategists • 265-8562
PA • Langhorne • Levittown Hobbies • 577-8086
PA • Media • Allied Hobbies • 891-2889
PA • Philadelphia • Translobe, Inc. • 322-6616
PA • Springfield • Allied Hobbies • 328-7720
PA • York • Ashland Hobbies, Inc. • 756-8418
PA • West Pittston • The Hobby Center • 694-1046
PA • Willow Grove • Willow Grove Hobbies Inc. • 657-2555
TN • Chattanooga • Other Worlds • 870-1074
TN • Murfreesboro • Gamemaster Hobbies Inc. • 896-5333
TX • El Paso • Sidhe Hobbies • 590-6560
TX • San Antonio • Frontier Games Inc. • 800-957-5294
VA • BlackBerry • The Hobby Shop • 593-2800
VA • Falls Church • Compleat Strategists • 532-2477
VA • Norfolk • Campaign Headquarters • 573-9451
VA • Roanoke • The Dusty Corner Bookstore • 776-9922
WV • Buckhannon • The Bookstore • 472-1840
WV • Kanova • Danzig Corridor • 453-1927

Armory Sponsors - Overseas

IT • Verona • The Armory / Giovanni Di Granci • 048-5000319
MT • Cazanera • Enchanted Worlds • 089-459-544
SWE • Varberg • The Armory / Wizards of the Coast • 921-7045
Duke Arrigo ripped the painting that hid his safe off the wall and hurled it across his study. How could the agreement be gone? Everyone who had put his seal to it was ruined, especially him. He snatched the gold writing case off his desk, pressed the recessed stud in the unicorn carving on the back wall, and ducked into his final secret, the escape passage down to the docks. If he could reach a ship, he’d be safe to try for the throne again another time. His cousin the king couldn’t rule forever.

But who had discovered their plot? They were so close. Oh, they’d had a setback or two, lands suddenly enmeshed in the law courts, a man killed in a street brawl, but he expected problems and reassured his backers. But someone must have talked if the final agreement disappeared barely half a day since he’d carried it home.

Reaching the door at last, Arrigo yanked it open, desperate to put the city behind him. But in front of him waited a full squad of soldiers, with one of his maids standing off to one side — in a royal uniform?

“You!” Suddenly he understood the betrayal. He’d hired one of the king’s spies to clean his house.

Tired of the same old thieves in their dark leather, cutting purses in the marketplace, or bashing marks in midnight alleys? Looking for a way to spice up your campaign? Perhaps it’s time to recruit some rogues for honest, open work with the local government by turning the thieves’ guild into an intelligence service.

This type of guild could be a campaign rarity, allowing DMs to introduce the idea on a small scale. In this case, the involved government should be neutral, both politically and in terms of alignment, and smaller or somehow weaker than its neighbors. Without using every talent available to it, how else could such a state survive?

Alternately, using thieves for espionage and covert operations could be the campaign norm, allowing DMs another way to introduce political intrigue to their campaigns, Adventures can be shaped from Cold War headlines, as well as from books and movies ranging from the latest techno-thriller to the Great Game between 19th-century Russia and England, the setting of Rudyard Kipling’s Kim.

Why would PCs turn away from the thrill of ransacking a royal treasury or prying fist-sized jewels from temple statues for what amounts to a regular day job? Although they won’t grow rich on government pay, the respectability, steady salary and chance of a pension (assuming they live long enough to collect) may prove tempting. Patriotism, the chance to serve king and country, is another potential lure. Why let paladins monopolize the righteousness in a party?

What’s more, for people with the quick reflexes and minds that thieving requires, any other choice of profession could be, to put it bluntly, a dead end. A government that uses those same talents for espionage will not take kindly to freelancers who could easily join its enemies.

When magic isn’t enough

In a world of spells and powers, why would anyone use rogues rather than magic? Surely the mystic arts are more reliable than any human (or elven, gnomish, etc.) resource.

But there are times when only a fireball will serve and times when only spies will do. Spells that duplicate or outperform a thief’s skills aren’t common, though they may be devised with the proper research; in any case, paying a rogue to eavesdrop on an ambassador or to find and copy a secret treaty will be cheaper than hiring a mage.

What’s more, spells can be blocked or detected. Metal sheeting or warding spells make clairaudience and clairvoyance useless; ESP requires the caster to be on the scene rather than safe at home; an invisible agent might not reach his target without leaving tracks, odors, or mysteriously opening and closing doors.

One of the more foolproof magical items that intelligence services can employ is the crystal ball, or a similar scrying device, to view the desired scene from any distance. But it, too, comes with drawbacks. Hearing what is being said, or even viewing the desired subject, isn’t guaranteed. No one can watch every area of interest every minute, further reducing the chance of obtaining useful information. And if the subjects of scrying become aware of scrutiny, a dispel magic spell will put the crystal ball out of commission for an entire day.

The perfect spy

The best characteristics for a spy vary depending on the mission. A sympathetic listener may coax confidences even out of people he’s just met, while the studious type, uncomfortable around people, may be a whiz at cryptography.

Specialized agents concentrate on skills that directly apply to their fields. Thus, the undercover operative working for Duke Arrigo knows a great deal about the running of a noble household, removing stains, picking locks, moving silently, and hiding in shadows (the better to eavesdrop on her employer’s secret meetings), but next to nothing about code-breaking or poisons.

On the other hand, general-purpose spies are also needed to cover unexpected or open-ended missions, where their guild supervisors can’t foresee how they will eventually reach their goal. These agents must be well-rounded, with a basic grounding in each of their class’ skills and an ability to think quickly and improvise.

While Dexterity is the prime requisite for thieves, would-be spies should consider putting their high scores in traits like Intelligence, Strength, or Charisma. It depends on the role they plan to have in their country’s service.

Now that they are working for the government, rogues need not be confined to a few alignment choices, although chaotic types will rarely prosper in a bureaucracy. (Perhaps the guild-masters should instead bear the title of director.) Because they are working within bounds set by the state, PCs may even find themselves playing what in essence are lawful good thieves; however, because espionage and covert operations may delve into moral “gray” areas, neutral or neutral good alignments are more appropriate.

Getting organized

How visible the intelligence guild is and how closely it is tied to the government depends on the campaign and its political and cultural setup. A state that relies primarily on espionage and covert operations to keep its independence may prefer to advertise that fact heavily to give its neighbors some inkling of what unfriendly moves might bring. Likewise, oppressive rulers will want their citizens to fear shadows listening at every door as a way to keep their grip on power.

On the other hand, delicate balances of power may require a country’s intelligence service to work from the shadows as much as thieves’ guilds of old, although they would still draw pay, however secretly, from the government. With no spies on the record as working for him directly, a king can still present an honest face in his dealings with his neighbors. “Plausible deniability” is one of the watchphrases in the murky world of espionage.

In either case, those guilds draw on all of their country’s resources to train and equip agents. Special compounds will be built to immerse budding spies in all the skills they will need as well as to offer refresher courses for more experienced employees. Picture a cross between a police academy and CIA training school, with obstacle courses in the form of buildings to be infiltrated, classroom work with locks to be picked, and walls of varying difficulty to be scaled under every possible weather condition.

Trainers from the army or palace guard cover fighting techniques, and sages teach languages and all variety of other specialized knowledge a mission might require. Ambassadors or well-traveled merchants serve as instructors in court etiquette and foreign customs to help agents blend in wherever they are sent.

With all these resources, the intelligence guild is much more likely to have useful magic items in its storerooms than the thieves’ guild. Rings of invisibility, crystal balls, and the like may not guarantee a successful mission, but they will help.

And what spy agency would be complete without the counterpart to James Bond’s Q, with a workshop to produce items part magical, part ingenious tinkering? This equipment might duplicate the standard thief’s kit but look innocuous to help hold together an agent’s cover, or it might be as flamboyant as any of 007’s combination pen-homing signal-lasers. DMs and PCs can let their creativity loose here, as long as they remember game balance.

Beyond the law

As mentioned above, any state that turns thieves into spies will work hard to keep out freelancers. PCs visiting from foreign lands, as well as natives who don’t feel the call of duty as strongly as guildmasters would like, will have to practice their trade even more circumspectly than normal to avoid the hunt for “rogue” rogues.

A special bureau may be set up with the double task of ferreting out the ordinary brand of thieves in addition to foreign spies. Perhaps your PCs would like to take a shot at a career in the fantasy equivalent of the FBI.

For renegade thieves, part of the thrill might come from trying to plan and pull off heists while eluding the governments grasp, a task much harder now that the “cops” have the same skills and better equipment. Even worse, with the state monopolizing the trade, where will freelancers obtain their toolkits and training?

If the few thieves who manage to remain free discover foreign spies in town, how will they react? Perhaps they will inform on them, out of patriotism or self-interest, but they might also go over to the enemy.
Nightbane™ RPG

Nightbane™ are part human and part supernatural predator. It is the supernatural part that calls to them the loudest and beckons with promises of power.

The Nightbane are believed to be the progeny of supernatural horrors from a place known as the Nightlands™.

Each possesses a comparatively frail, human “facade” and a supernatural, superhuman “morphus.” The morphus is said to reflect the character’s personality or subconscious fears, desires and self-image. Thus, some are exotic and beautiful, while others (most) are misshapen monsters. No two appear exactly alike and even the most hideous can have the spirit of a saint, while the most handsome and beautiful may be evil incarnate.

The Nightbane™ possess incredible magic and supernatural powers but must transform into monsters to use them. This supernatural aspect makes them much more aware of the world around them and the inhuman creatures of the night who share it.

The Nightbane are pulled in all directions by passion, hatred, loneliness and fear. Some are corrupted and turn from the light into the beckoning darkness. Those who cannot be turned (and there are many) fight to protect the innocent and are hunted and destroyed by the Nightlords™ and their minions. Others are slaughtered by fearful humans, vampires and dark forces.

- A complete role-playing game! Compatible with Rifts®, Palladium Fantasy RPG & the entire Palladium Megaverse®.
- The Nightbane™ R.C.C. enables gamers to play supernatural shape-changers. Beings who can appear completely human, but are really superhuman creatures from the twilight dimension known as Nightlands™.
- Nightbane™ “talents” are supernatural and magic abilities of incredible power and range. The only catch, they must shed their human disguise and become a monster to use them.
- Over a dozen other O.C.C.s and R.C.C.s, including the Sorcerer, Mystic, Vampire, Doppleganger and others.
- New magic, psionic abilities and supernatural powers.
- Nightlords™ and their minions, like the Hunters and Hounds.
- Written by C.J. Carella. Cover by Brom.
- 240 pages; $20.95 plus $2.00 for postage and handling.
- A game of contemporary fantasy and horror. Over 800 copies sold! Discover the secrets of power and duality.

Between the Shadows™
Nightbane™ World Book One

The Astral Plane and World of Dreams (the Dreamstream™) like you have never seen them before! Dynamic page after page of unique concepts, bizarre powers, diabolical villains, monsters, and excitement! More on the Nightlords and world history.

Players who would rather play humans can create members of the ultra-secret organization known as the Spook Squad, ex-CIA, FBI, DEA, and other operatives locked in a covert war against the supernatural. This supplement really brings Nightbane™ to life.

Highlights Include:
- The Astral Plane as you’ve never imagined it!
- The frightening reality and plunderers of the Dreamstream™.
- Astral and Dream Magic, including the ability to mold entire kingdoms out of thin air ... er ... ectoplasm.
- Over 20 new character classes, including the Astral Mage, Dream Dancer, Mind Master, and Arcane Detective.
- New Nightbane™ Talents, Morphus shapes and data.
- The Spook Squad! An underground organization dedicated to fighting the Nightlords™ and the destruction of all nonhumans.
- New psionic abilities, equipment and campaign ideas.
- Written by C.J. Carella, with art by Post, Martin & Breaux.
- $16.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling. Available now!

Nightlands™
Nightbane™ World Book Two

Nightlands™ takes the players into the strange and wondrous Nightlands dimension, a twisted mirror image of our reality and home of the Nightlords! Discover the true power behind the Ba’al and their plans for Earth and the Nightbane.

Highlights Include:
- The world and people of the Nightlands™ revealed!
- The true power behind the Ba’al and their dark secrets.
- New character classes, demonic minions, & strange powers.
- New Nightbane™ Talents, Morphus shapes and data.
- Campaign and adventure ideas.
- Cover by John Zeleznik
- Interior art by Martin, Post, Petersen, and Carson.
- Written by C.J. Carella
- 160 pages — $16.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling. *Available in stores everywhere late August.

Available at stores everywhere!
When rogues are caught, punishment is likely to be more severe than simple thieves have come to expect. When facing talents that could too easily be turned against it, the state can’t afford to take chances.

Enemy spies and double agents should expect harsh measures. Although American courts can execute spies only during wartime, real-life agents in other countries may not fare so well. In any event, the teleport spells and other magic available to a fantasy world make lifet ime imprisonment impractical. Exile to another plane may be a workable alternative for merciful DMs.

Should you choose to accept...

Now that you have set up your intelligence service, recruited your spies, and trained them, what do you do with them now? By applying situations from both fiction and real life to their own campaign worlds, DMs should find a nearly endless supply of adventures.

At its most basic, espionage is simply information-gathering. Some agents may be servants or tradesmen earning extra cash by reporting what they see and hear; others may collect intelligence by striking up conversations with specific people and by making or buying maps and acquiring reports on trade, defensive measures, or troop movements.

In more delicate or dangerous situations a thief’s special talents come into play, allowing him to sneak and hide wherever needed to overhear conversations. In some cases the desired information may be kept behind locked doors.

At least as much energy goes into safeguarding your own intelligence. Cryptography covers breaking enemy ciphers as well as writing what you hope is unbreakable code for your own messages. This would be a new skill, similar to a thief’s ability to read languages, and it could be played out either as a simple percentage chance or by detailing the code involved. In any event, remember that higher-level spies are better at both breaking and writing code. (See the Cryptography sidebar.)

To handle a code-breaking situation, compare the ability of the agent who devised the code with that of the agent who is trying to crack it. Add or subtract the difference between the two numbers to the code-breaker’s score; that becomes his percentage chance to decipher the message. Under this system, cryptographers with more experience and intelligence write more complicated codes and crack them more easily than do novices or less intelligent spies.

Attempts to read a coded message require at least four hours of concentration, with an additional 5% chance for success for every eight-hour day spent at the task. Bear in mind that no modifier may raise the percentage to succeed above 90%. Of course, should an agent discover the particular key a cryptographer has used (perhaps the subject of a mission in itself), all messages using that key may be read automatically. On the other hand, code-breakers must know the language the message is written in or success is impossible.

The four-hour minimum may be overlooked when the code-breaker’s ability is at least 60 points higher than the code-writer’s. In these cases, waiving the time requirement doesn’t change the chance of success or failure, and again, deciphering the message is never possible, no matter how skilled the cryptographer, without knowing the message language.

For example, undercover operative Kayla Morant has extracted a coded message from Duke Arrigo’s mail. The cipher’s writer has an adjusted ability score of 40%, while Kayla’s score is 25%. Subtracting 15% (40% - 25%) from her score leaves her with a 10% chance of cracking the code, a percentage she can better by 5% for every additional day she works on the cipher.

In another situation, Kayla faces a more skilled cryptographer’s work. His ability score is 55%, leaving her with a -5% chance of reading the message (55% - 25% = 30%; 25% - 30% = -5%). However, by spending two more days at her task, she now has a 5% chance of success (2 days x 5% = 10%; -5% + 10% = 5%).

Also falling under the category of safeguards is much of the counterintelligence work. These missions involve “mole-hunting,” the search for double agents in the ranks; finding and plugging leaks in sensitive departments, including the households and staffs of important nobles; and identifying foreign spies and renegade thieves. The guild may consider trying to “turn” discovered agents rather than executing or imprisoning them.

Similarly, PCs may be ordered on undercover missions to recruit new agents in a neighboring country. Feeling out just who is safe to approach but also in a position to gather useful information can be tricky and dangerous. Trying to escape being denounced as an enemy spy can rival the thrills of any dungeon-delving.

Political or economic decisions are only as good as the information behind them, so spreading false intelligence becomes a vital mission. Enemy agents, once known, can be invaluable for funnelling data; this has the double benefit of controlling the damage they do to your operations and allowing you to control what your government knows and thus how it will react.

Another way to contaminate another nation’s information flow — a more exciting but also more dangerous one — is to go in and switch or alter documents. Forgery is a vital skill when copying by hand is the only option.

At times the intelligence guild may need to discredit someone: a noble with dangerous friends and ideas, or a merchant on the verge of blowing an agent’s cover. In these cases the only option may be to plant evidence that incriminates the target in some crime, calling on all the shady talents for breaking and entering.

If the evidence is believable and the target potentially useful, the covert operation may not end with a simple frame. Let the agent be the one to “discover” the evidence she planted and use it to enlist the merchants or noble’s help. Blackmail is an ugly word for a common enough ploy in the real world of espionage.

Information doesn’t cover just the spoken or written word. Highly coveted objects for our own intelligence agencies are samples of weapons and other technology, and fantasy spies should target the equivalents. Newly developed magic is the most obvious in this category, to be smuggled back home to the state’s research wizards, but don’t overlook innovations in other fields. A new grain that feeds more people or better

---

Table: Cryptography

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Intelligence</th>
<th>Modifier</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3 - 4</td>
<td>-15%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 - 6</td>
<td>-10%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7 - 8</td>
<td>-5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9 - 14</td>
<td>0%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15 - 16</td>
<td>+5%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>+10%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>+15%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Base</td>
<td>0%</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maximum</td>
<td>90%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Continued on page 38
where fiction and fantasy become reality visit your nearest virgin store and see our huge range of trading cards, miniatures and roleplaying games.

some titles are only available in selected stores.

megastores

mega means more music+video+games
Playing for keeps

Outside of the cost for hiring a spy as given in the original edition of the DMG, the AD&D® game has all but ignored the possibility of using espionage as a source of adventure. Consider the raw excitement, adventure, and intrigue inherent in almost any spy movie or book, from the wild action of James Bond and Arnold Schwarzenegger movies to the taut suspense of Cold War espionage novels. If your run-of-the-mill dungeon crawl campaign can't hold a candle to even the most boring secret agent story, perhaps it's time to thrust your players into the shadowy world of the spy.

Chase away the idea that spies are ignoble or have no place in ancient society. Everyone from traitors and harlots to generals, ninja, and noblemen have waded the waters of espionage. Fantasy spies are walking, talking adventure. Everything they do is full of danger. Most importantly, they aren't greedy, inexperienced thugs grubbing around in ruins for gold coins.

Spy stories are long on plot, character, and suspense, and short on the “go there, kill this” quality of the typical dungeon campaign. A good spy adventure is full of lying, deceit, paranoia, double-crossing, and white-knuckle action. Basically, all the good stuff. Adding a spy campaign to a fantasy setting takes a little work, but it pays off in dividends of great role-playing.

The job

A spy is a person who gathers information. There are quite a few other things a spy can do, but information is the basic currency of the spy’s world. How information is gathered is up to the spy and whoever hired him.

Sun Tzu, the ancient Chinese philosopher-general who wrote The Art of War, built the foundation of intelligence gathering with his book Ping Fa, or The Principles of War. Besides theories on creating a spy organization, Sun Tzu described five kinds of spies:

- Native agents are inhabitants of an enemy’s state or country. They are ordinarily peasants or villagers who need the cash. Because they lack training and cannot be counted on to take risks, native agents are good only for general information on troop movements or the disposition of the people.

- Inside agents, like native agents, are citizens of the enemy’s government. They are military or government officials paid for inside information. According to Sun Tzu, friendly agents should be on the lookout for enemy officials who dislike their government for some reason, who are in debt, or who are prone to bribery or seduction. Because they have higher standing than mere peasants, the information provided by inside agents is more valuable.

- Friendly or double agents are enemy agents who have been discovered. Instead of being executed, they are pardoned, bribed, and sent back to their masters to provide information to their new employers while keeping their cover as friendly spies.

- Agents of death are those agents who have become expendable. The agent is purposely given false information and sent on a mission. In the course of the mission, the enemy is allowed to capture the agent. Feeling betrayed, the agent tries to get back at his old employers by spilling the beans. The enemy acts on the agent’s information, thinking it is good. When the enemy is burned by the false information, he punishes the death agent. Thus, the original employer kills two birds with one stone.

- Living agents are the classic secret agent-type spies. They are sent into enemy territory to gather information. These agents are picked for their intelligence, hardiness, bravery, agility, and knowledge. According to Sun Tzu, no one should be closer to the commander or receive bigger rewards. The PCs should ordinarily have jobs as living agents.

The above descriptions are just general ideas of spy jobs. Remember to keep an open mind. Anybody willing to gather or sell information is considered a spy of some sort.

Three kinds of organizations hire spies: political, military, and law enforcement. The organization that employs the PCs determines the nature of their missions.

Political organizations are interested in the affairs of other governments. Though most spies concentrate on this aspect of the enemy, spies may work on allies, as well. In today’s world, the U.S. employs spies to keep tabs on countries like Canada, Great Britain, and Israel, and vice versa.

Such “friendly” spies gather information on domestic and foreign policies and their effects. How was last year’s crop yield? Will the country sign a treaty? Does the king have a mistress? How high are the taxes? How do the peasants feel about the government? Will they revolt? What is the court wizard working on? What is her favorite color? It is the political spy’s job to find out anything one government would want to know about another.

The spy’s masters may ask him not only to investigate the other government but also to affect it. Perhaps the spy will have to buy votes on the parliament so a particular trade agreement goes favorably for his employer. Maybe it would be nice for a certain treaty to disappear, or that a particular courtier fall into disfavor after the spy spreads enough rumors. If the spy’s client is unhappy with another country’s government, would it not be convenient if the disgruntled peasants suddenly decided to revolt, especially if the new government were friendlier?

For all of the potential missions a political spy can undertake, a military spy has more. Spies hired by the military can range from a native agent reporting on local troop movements in exchange for a few coins to a full-fledged military scout who doubles as a guerrilla warrior.

Intelligence gathering is a necessary part of good military strategy, and it is by no means a new theory. Genghis Khan would send out soldiers posing as deserters to enemy camps. Not only would they feed the enemy false information while they stayed in the camp, but they would also report back with information on the enemy’s strengths, weaknesses, and territory. Genghis Khan’s head general, Subotai, claimed wars were won on the strength of espionage.

Like the political spy, the military spy’s job is to find out anything that would be of interest to his employer. Troop movements, soldier morale, strategies, supply lines, leadership, and plans are all fair game. How the spy comes across this information is his business. Many military scouts need only sit in a hidden position and keep a careful eye on the enemy forces, reporting back occasionally. Some may actually infiltrate the enemy camp in order to talk to the soldiers or to steal their battle plans.

During the interminable wars for the domination of Japan, the daimyô (feudal lords) would hire ninja (or shinobi no mono, as they were called) from the Iga province to gather information and stir up trouble. Any soldier with a fast horse can act as a military scout, but it took the shinobi no mono to climb over castle walls and assassinate generals, set fires, cause confusion, and sabotage weapons and supplies. The Japanese also employed bandsits called rappa (“grass”) or even the honorable samurai to wage terror campaigns. When the daimyô Oda Nobunaga decided to invade the ninja’s homeland, a small army of Iga samurai were able to beat back Nobunaga’s much larger force with the help of the ninja’s espionage and unconventional warfare.

Finally, you might want to mix your PCs up in secret service law enforcement. Though essentially police officers, secret service agents often use elements of intelligence gathering and spy techniques. The missions the PCs receive depend largely on how the government uses the secret service. They may be involved in counter-intelligence, ferreting out enemy spies, or making sure their own secrets stay safe. Perhaps they handle the shadier law enforcement jobs, like spying on radical political movements or hunting down potential political assassins with orders to kill. If the government does not trust its people, the secret police may run a network of spies and informants in order to keep dissenters in line, KGB-style.

The secret police is nothing new. Augustus Caesar created a group of “political police” in order to keep on top of domestic events and opinions. A secret police force is not inherently good or evil, either. Even though James Bond is one of the “good guys,” he carries a license to kill. The secret police may be a small group of elite, extra-legal professionals devoted to the safety of king and country. On the other hand, they may be sadistic thugs; the tools of an oppressive government. How much the PCs know about their agency — and what they do if they learn it is evil — is up to them.

In any case, the PCs (usually) do not have to work for a particular government or military organization if they do not want to. They may be the leaders of a peasant information network during a rebellion, à la the American Revolution. For a while, even the Japanese depended on the Black Dragon Society, a generally patriotic agency of mercenary spies. Who the PCs work for and what they do should be decided between the GM and the players.

The agent

Anybody can be a spy or work for spies. Ordinarily though, it is more fun to play a character in the thick of things rather than an ignorant courier wandering around town with an envelope and a password. A government usually trusts only a specific kind of skilled, reliable person for the really interesting, dangerous missions. At the same time, if a character is skilled and reliable, then background, social standing, caste, or religion fall as significant factors in the hiring process. Doors may open up that would not open before. Whether thief or noble, prince or pauper, if the character can come across with the goods, he has the job.

Of course, the character may be hired on as a dupe or a decoy, but that is another situation altogether.

Rogues

A rogue is the best choice for a secret agent. A good rogue is brave, agile, and intelligent. Thieving skills are perfectly suited for stealing documents, drugging drinks, climbing castle walls, eavesdropping on conversations, and escaping before anybody even knows a spy is around.

On top of that, rogues often have the underworld connections to tap the information pipelines. A well-connected rogue spy knows when the ambassador from the enemy country is arriving, how many guards he has, where he is staying, how to get in, who his servants are, what time he goes to bed, and where he keeps his documents just by spending five minutes passing around silver pieces in certain areas of town. Gold is worth risking life and limb to a thief, information is worth more than gold to a spy.

Finally and perhaps most importantly, the thieves’ guild is very similar to a spy cell. Both provide safe houses, information, resources, networks, and missions. The GM may consider allowing spy PCs to learn a spies’ cant, similar to the thieves’ cant, so they may communicate and tell who is “in the game” and who is not.

Bards are also excellent choices for spies, perhaps even better than thieves. The bard makes his living as a storehouse of history, stories, information, and news, while the thief merely applies skills for the acquisition of money toward the collection of intelligence. Bards are readily invited into the homes and castles of people in power while guards sit at the gate looking for thieves. Bards are ordinarily more charming, and thus better trusted.
Bards not only collect information, they can influence the people around them through song, poem, or music. A peaceful tale when the enemy king is about to declare war on the bard’s country or a war song to stir a peasant mob into action is far more useful to a spy than any sword.

Warriors

Warriors usually make the best military spies. Warriors are in the business of finding out what warriors are doing. A fast horse and a quick mind go a long way toward making a good scout. A warrior knows how a soldier thinks and speaks and may have a better time blending in and infiltrating an enemy camp. Any warrior who can lie convincingly, think on his feet, and remember what he sees and hears is material for a good military spy. The ability to fight his way out of a tough scrape and live to spy another day is pretty useful, too.

In many cases, the military spy is an established member of the army. The Roman legions used agents, called exploratores, whose duty it was to go ahead of the legions to gauge the strength of the enemy and the lay of the land.

Rangers make even better spies. They are used to working by themselves, can move quickly and quietly through natural terrain, keep themselves hidden and, at higher levels, have access to spells. In the wild, some rangers may have an information network equal to a rogue’s urban network. Unfortunately, rangers cannot always be counted on. They have a tendency for taking their own initiative and doing as they wish. If it is a cause they believe in, however, there is no better military spy or guerrilla fighter a general could have on his side.

Paladins, with their honorable ideals and aversion to lying, make bad spies.

Priests

Clerics as spies? You bet. In a fantasy world where church officials have the same power and ambitions of the feudal lords, and holy wars are common, the need to recruit spies becomes apparent. The church may not want to sully their hands with “unsavory” types, or it may trust only agents of their own religion. Perhaps secret service agents are needed by a theocratic government. Whatever the reason, clerics can be as crafty as anyone else. With a grocery list of useful spells at their command, especially in the divination sphere, clerics can be very effective spies.

Druids are dedicated to protecting nature and do not usually serve the petty needs of some country or army. If the need is there, though, druids become excellent spies in a pinch. They have all of the benefits of rangers, plus a greater access to handy spells.

Wizards

Sitting in a dusty tower, reading books and performing experiments, wizards are at first glance awful spies. More than anybody else, however, they have the intelligence to map out complex strategies and devious intrigues. With a little imagination and his trusty spell book by his side, the mage has an arsenal of tricks and powers the best thief around could not touch with a 10'-pole. The possibilities for a mage to wring information out of the enemy is almost limitless.

Most specialist wizards have at least a few spells that could be useful for locating information. For fairly obvious reasons, though, the diviner is best able to dredge up intelligence without even leaving the privacy of his own home. Any general in the campaign world would give an arm and a leg to have an oracle on his side. Any smart general, that is.

On the other side of the espionage playing field is counter-intelligence. The illusionist is the best buy for your counter-intelligence buck. (“But I saw those troops heading west! I really did!”)

Spy proficiencies

Any of the optional non-weapon proficiency that helps a spy keep his cover is good. A few stand out as particularly helpful to the fantasy secret agent. These include direction sense, modern languages, riding, swimming, heraldry, reading/writing, local history, disguise, forgery, jumping, reading lips, set snares, tightrope walking, ventriloquism, and tracking, to name but a few.

The organization

Whether the PC spy works for a government, army, police force, or some other group, there is usually a spy organization of some kind to coordinate intelligence efforts. The organization as a whole is typically referred to as an agency, and a group of spies working together on a particular job or geographical area is called a cell. For instance, the PCs could work for the King’s Intelligence Agency while operating in the enemy capitol city cell.

In terms of operation, the network of cells is closer to a thieves’ guild than anything else, in terms of operation. An established cell must have a leader of some kind. Temporary cells may also have a team leader of some kind, or it may be a small group of equally professional spies working on a single job before quickly disappearing.

Like a thieves’ guild, the local cell tries to provide as much assistance as possible to ensure the success of a PC spy’s mission, including safe houses, background information, blueprints, equipment, informants, and disposable weapons. If the PC is deep under cover, the cell may be the only link he has with his employers.

Remember, everything is mutable. An agency may have only a single base of operation from which it sends out roving spies. In the case of a rebellion, there is probably no agency at all, just a collection of tiny cells working out of caves, attics, barns, and forest camps. A country may have a number of agencies covering the spectrum of political, military, and law enforcement intelligence. Maybe a government hires spies from a mercenary agency like the Black Dragon Society on an as-needed basis instead of taking the time and trouble to set up their own.

You also have to decide what kind of relationship the PCs have with their agency. Are they valuable, trusted agents with good friends among their employers? Perhaps the leaders of their government consider spying a necessary evil. Are the PC spies just doing their duty, or were they forced into service by coercion or circumstance? Do the PCs even know who they are working for? If you do not think it makes any difference, compare almost any James Bond flick to a movie like La Femme Nikita. A character who is fighting for king and country has a very different relationship with his agency than a character who is stealing secrets from his own government because the agency will throw his mother to the gibbering mothers if he does not. Also, the PCs will approach their missions far more cautiously if they know from the start that their “comrades” consider them expendable. Always keep in mind, though, that the key to a good spy campaign is a certain level of fear and paranoia. Unless you think it would be more fun, the PC agents should never trust anyone, especially the people who call themselves their friends and employers.

Obviously, not every chamber maid who peeks through a keyhole for a gold piece finds herself pressed into the agency. The government/military/law enforcement resources are usually available only to folks who are in the game.

On the other hand, the agency may not allow the characters to leave whenever they choose. Books and movies are full of stories of spies who want to retire from espionage, but the agency decides they “know too much.” How the PCs resolve the situation is up to them, of course.

Gadgets

Most of the high-action spy movies feature neat gadgets like pen lasers and flying cars. Even real life spies have certain tools of the trade, such as automatic lock pickers and hidden microphones. But what can a spy stuck in a technology-poor fantasy world use?

In a campaign loaded with magic, this stuff is Cold War era, but a few of the “true spy” stuff is Cold War era, but a few of the “true spy” books. The intricate triple-dealings and disinformation perpetrated by the real spies throughout history is too complex to ever begin to go into. Most of the “true spy” stuff is Cold War era, but a few of particular interest delve into the history of espionage. They give an idea of how spies fulfilled their duty without gadgets, cameras, or sniper rifles.

The fantasy spy campaign is the best of both worlds. It takes the players out of the dungeon and drops them into the even darker world of espionage. The players have something more important to do than kill things. Their actions can decide the rise and fall of kingdoms, or throw them into the deepest pits of suspense and paranoia. They are spies operating in a world where spellcasters can read minds, people turn invisible, and the average doppleganger is far deadlier than any dragon.

When approached by our reporters, the agency would neither confirm nor deny Michael T. Kuciak’s involvement in the alleged covert operations leading to the publication of this article. Kuciak himself could not be reached for comment.
Psyscape™ Rifts® World Book 12:

Explore the realm of Psyscape™, a mysterious gathering place of psychics that has been a source of rumors and legends for centuries! Discover the secrets, powers and dangers of the Astral Plains and embark on a series of adventures that will bring players and psychics to a keener vision of the worlds they can’t see!

- New psychic powers and psychic O.C.C.s, including the Astral Warrior, Psi-Flier, Mirage Weaver, Gate Maker, and Psycho Killer.
- Hints about the activities of the Federation of Magic and a couple of minor kingdoms.
- Menaces include foul sorcerers, Astral Undead, Mailen the Dark and the coming of the Soulbreakers, among others.
- World information and adventure ideas.
- Written by C.J. Carella, with additional text by Siembieda.
- 160 pages — $16.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling. Available in stores everywhere late July.

Rifts® Game Shield & Adventures

A handy Game Master and player’s aid that has been demanded by the fans for the last year.

This package will contain two, three panel game screens; one tech, the other magic. Each with quick reference charts and data to make running Rifts campaigns all the easier and fun to play.

A 64 page adventure book completes this package. It will include a handful of adventures as well as a page after page of Hooke, Line & Sink™ adventures. Enough to keep a campaign going for months!

- Adventures and materials by Kevin Siembieda and others.
- Cover & Screen Art by Kevin Long.
- Game Shied designed by Michael Leonard.
- $12.95 plus $1.00 for postage and handling.
- Available in August, 1996.

RiftsworkZ™ Portfolio

Available this July is a portfolio of six (6) color prints, suitable for framing, by John Zeleznik. The portfolio will come with a certificate of authenticity, will be signed and numbered by the artist, and comes in a classy plastic envelop. Includes the covers from Rifts® Japan, Coalition War Campaign™, Juicer Uprising™, Rifts® Conversion Book 2, Undersea, and Psyscape (to May press).

- Limited to 2000 portfolios.
- Each full color print measures 11 x 14 inches.
- $29.95 plus $3.00 for postage and handling.

Rifts® Index & Adventures

Highlights Include:
- An index compiled by Craig Crawford.
- Over 150 pages of adventures: Five adventures (two by Siembieda) plus loads of adventure ideas and over 30 Hook, Line & Sink™ adventure ideas by Jolly Blackburn and others. Plus source material set in North America and hints of things to come.
- 96 action packed pages; $12.95 plus $1.00 for postage and handling. In stores now!

Rifts® World Book 10: The Juicer Uprising™

The Juicer Uprising™ is packed with never before revealed information about the Juicer’s conversion process, dangerous side effects, insanity, Juicers, Juicer Wannabes, Juicer gangs, special Juicer weapons and armor, plus over a dozen new O.C.C.s including the Juicer Gladiator, Assassin, Scout, and Juicer variants like the 1Han, Hyperon, Psycho-Stalker, Mega-Juicer, Dragon Juicer and Splugorth equivalents!

- 160 pages — $16.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling.

Available at stores everywhere!

---

Copyright 1996 Palladium Books®. All rights reserved, worldwide.

Palladium Books® and Rifts® are registered trademarks owned & licensed by Kevin Siembieda and Palladium Books Inc. Coalition War Campaign, Psyscape, Juicer, Juicer Uprising, RiftsworkZ, and other titles and names are trademarks owned by Kevin Siembieda and Palladium Books Inc.
Spying is an ancient, if not quite honorable, occupation; some consider it the world’s second oldest profession. In the AD&D® game, intelligence operations can be exciting adventures for PCs. Such missions can be matters of national importance at higher levels, as the PCs guide the fate of their country through their actions.

As explained in the Dungeon Master® Guide, employing spies is fraught with hazards. The major pitfall of hiring intelligence agents is that many are inherently untrustworthy. Also, role-playing potential is lost whenever the PCs delegate their own intelligence work to NPCs. When PCs become more powerful, however, they may be faced with many enemies. The use of spies and counterspies becomes compelling, since PCs can’t be everywhere at once, and their henchmen may lack the skills to protect against a rival’s subtle machinations.

When judging the use of spies, the DM shouldn’t allow the party to obtain information that damages the campaign or ruins adventures. This usually isn’t difficult; the chances of the PCs finding a exceptionally good spy are small, the possibility of gaining such knowledge is not great, the mission could take years, and the enemy probably has far more experience in employing spies and counterspies.

In game terms, the PC may recruit a spy by the normal process. The PC acts as a spymaster: assigning missions, making payments, and interpreting the information the spy provides. The time and effort the PC spends determines the quality of the intelligence. If he’s a careless supervisor, the spy may spend time carousing in bars, sending back whatever information the PC would like to hear. If he doesn’t pay attention to details or confirm the reports, he will probably be mislead. Sending more spies can actually be counterproductive. For example, in 1588, Don Antonio, the erstwhile king of Portugal, employed two “loyal” agents at his court, who both were actually double agents for Philip II of Spain. The pair were unaware of the true situation and spent most of their time spying on each other.

One way to reduce the risk and work by a PC is for him to establish a professional intelligence organization. Virtually all rulers and governments have them. Not only do they spy on enemies, but they keep an eye on friends as well. They may even be watching the PCs!

Intelligence organizations

Intelligence organizations have existed since ancient times. The Persian Empire was served by “the Eyes and Ears of the King.” Britain’s MI5 and MI6 had their origin in the Elizabethan age; however, one rarely finds anything like the “Department of Spies” in a medieval fantasy setting. Rather, such organizations are referred to by euphemisms such as the “Royal Messenger Service,” “Special Archives,” “Foreign Embassies,” or, more ominously, “Secret Police.”

Ancient and Medieval spy agencies were different from modern ones in that they weren’t large, paper-bound, bureaucratic organizations, didn’t collect and classify massive amounts of information on many subjects, and had no widespread surveillance and communications operations. They relied principally on human intelligence (i.e., spies).

A spy organization consists of a spymaster (described below), a few sages and clerks who analyze and file information, cryptologists, other support personnel, the inevitable agents and spies, and a number of part-time informants and operatives. The spymaster reports to his employer, usually in secret, bypassing all other channels. To protect themselves, all who work for the group keeps their identities secret, and the same goes for the agency’s budget, operations, internal organization, communications, and plans.

Inside the group itself, information is “compartmentalized,” and only the spymaster knows everything. Even the agency’s employer is not privy to these secrets. Centralized control of intelligence can prevent friction between spies operating in the same area.

A spy agency also needs a network of couriers, safe houses, front organizations, and a source of special items, including magic. Many thieves’ and assassins’ groups are organized in this same manner.

Spying is an expensive business. Spies take great risks and demand high salaries: up to 10,000 gold pieces or more per mission. Expenses must also be paid by the PC; spies travel often and far, and some of them have a reputation for high living. Salaries for support staff and others should be several times the normal amount, to deter bribery.

The need for secrecy means everything takes longer and costs more. A PC who wants to disrupt a neighboring lord’s fief by supplying rebellious peasants with arms would find that having his spies do this would cost several times that of simply buying the weapons and handing them over to the peasants himself. On the other hand, if the plot is uncovered, the PC can claim he had nothing to do with it. A clever spymaster carries out the PC’s wishes without the need for a direct order, so the PC can truthfully (more or less) deny involvement.

The business of spying

Spy operations include three areas: intelligence gathering, espionage operations, and counter-intelligence. Any single intelligence operation could involve one, two, or all three.

Intelligence gathering

Simply put, this is the collection of information. The information may be public, or it may be obscure and secret. Public knowledge may be assembled from news, rumors, libraries, sages, documents, and reports by travelers or storytellers. Collecting open data is an easy but tedious task, and it can be accomplished by relatively inexperienced agents.
Secrets can be uncovered only by actually spying — eavesdropping, bribery, intercepting communications, and stealing documents, among other methods. Many can be persuaded to tell secrets through flattery, trickery, seduction, offers of sympathy, and camaraderie, or the influence of someone they believe is a friend, relative, or authority figure. Enter the spy.

The best spy is one who’s highly placed among adversaries and who has legitimate access to secrets. Still, problems remain; some enemy leaders won’t trust anyone with their secrets, others may change their minds so often as to make secrets nearly useless, and a few may be so Machiavellian that no one really knows their plans.

Another important consideration is the enemy’s awareness of stolen secrets. When they know they’ve been compromised, enemies can take countermeasures to limit the damage and find out who stole them. If they don’t know, the secret can be a valuable asset if used at the proper time. But taking advantage of the secret may give the source away. Nothing can be kept secret forever, neither secrets nor their theft.

Once collected, public or secret information must be examined to determine its accuracy and usefulness. Sages can play an important part in this part of the process, as their knowledge and intelligence allow them to make reliable appraisals and predictions. Public information is usually voluminous, detailed, and largely trivial. It must be slowly and carefully analyzed to produce any meaningful intelligence. Secret information is much more to the point. However, enemies may plant false secrets to mislead others.

The analysis of conflicting and possibly misleading data is fraught with pitfalls, and this remains the most daunting intelligence task. Even when correct conclusions are produced, they are not necessarily believed by those in charge. The Crusaders often suffered unnecessary losses when they failed to heed the advice of the Byzantines, who had an excellent intelligence system.

Although spies can travel to and from their assignments, this takes time, limits their effectiveness, and may be dangerous. It’s better if the agent can stay in one place and make reports to a messenger, who takes them back to his spymaster. A network of couriers can be used to transmit communications. They can be ordinary persons who hand deliver messages, a pony-express service, or even homing pigeons.

Interception and decoding of enemy communications is a common method of spying. It’s standard procedure to code or encrypt all diplomatic and confidential messages. Such messages, once intercepted, must be unscrambled by codebreakers. Alexander the Great used secret messages enciphered into innocuous reports. They were deciphered by wrapping the scroll around a specially-sized baton, which lined-up the words of the secret message.

Espionage operations

Espionage operations are the clandestine and illicit side of the spy business. They include subversion, kidnapping, propaganda, seduction, assassination, blackmail, theft, entrapment, sabotage, smear campaigns, coups, covert operations, and other dirty tricks. In this instance, a primary consideration is not getting caught, since such ventures go beyond ordinary spying. Spies caught in covert operations are treated as criminals, and diplomatic relations with their homeland are strained at the least.

Espionage operations are very risky and must be judged by the DM on a case-by-case basis. What works in one place may not be effective somewhere else. It is critical to have reliable, up-to-date intelligence and dynamic actions by the involved agents for the plot to succeed. Unlike ordinary spying, it usually takes a fair number of skilled NPCs — and possibly also the PCs — to execute an operation, making timing and cooperation crucial. The intrusive nature of these operations means that they may create a backlash later on, even if they succeed at first.

Counterintelligence

Counterintelligence is the prevention of spying by enemies. It begins with basic security precautions. Does the party discuss their plans in bars or public places where anyone can hear? Do they have loose-tongued followers? What do they really know about the background of their hirelings? Do they keep their valuable items and secrets locked up and guarded? Do the shop owners where they purchase magic and supplies give out information on what they've bought? What about landlords, neighbors, and local police and officials? Are there public records about the PCs' taxes, property, various licenses and registrations, criminal or civil court involvements? Are their messages protected from interception, or are they censored? Security revolves around protecting these secrets.

Counterintelligence agents (counterspies) watch for enemy spies. Since an enemy spy could be just about anyone, this means that counterspies are essentially snooping on their own people, although their main effort is toward strangers and suspicious activity. Reading their mail is a common counterintelligence chore. Historically, most resources used in spying go to counterintelligence.

The use of counterspies is easier than using spies because they operate on familiar ground and have local support when needed. Personnel also include police investigators and bodyguards. A PC might balk at the cost of a counterspy group, but what would it be worth if they saved him from an assassin's blade?

Counterintelligence also involves the spread of disinformation to deceive potential enemies. It may be as simple as paying lowlifes to spread a few false rumors, or it could be a complex deception scheme involving bogus armies, faked communications, and dummy castles.

Example: Some adventurers enter a new city and are accosted by a gang of beggars. Brushing them off, they soon meet a foreign merchant, a visitor like themselves, who chats amiably and steers them toward a good inn. The innkeeper welcomes the party and provides good food and pleasant company. Are these standard, random encounters?

Not at all. One beggar was an informant who memorized the party's appearance and reported to the secret police as soon as they were around the corner. The "foreign merchant" is a counterspy assigned to watch them, who carefully examined the PCs' equipment and tried to find out their background and objectives. The inn is actually a front, and the staff are informers or agents. The rooms are observed by spyholes, and when the PCs sleep, their chambers can be searched. If the PCs are just passing through, they may never know the scrutiny they've been under. If they're up to no good, the secret police chief already knows their descriptions and abilities, and has a plan to neutralize them. A strike force might be standing by, just out of sight.

The secret police

The secret police are a combination of spy agency and security force. Unlike other intelligence organizations, they have legal arrest and judicial powers. They do not merely look for spies but for anyone who dissents with the regime. Secret police forces are almost as old as spies; Sejanus, under the Emperor Tiberius, headed a secret police operation that terrorized Rome. In the 14th century, Charles V of France instituted a security and counterintelligence service that developed into an oppressive secret police force.
The secret police have direct and brutal methods for dealing with enemy spies and traitors. People cooperate with them out of fear, and they often have huge numbers of informants. In nations with secret police, everyone expects to be watched.

Spies

Some spies are professionals, while others are amateurs. Professional spies are usually rogues or thieves, although they may be members of any character class. Their primary incentive is money, although a few have more noble motives. They are difficult to find and hire. Fairly good at disguise, they often masquerade as bards, traveling merchants, nobles, mercenaries, entertainers, heralds, or priests. Unlike modern, patriotic agents, they are generally freelancers. Freelance agents may sell information to the highest bidder and some resell it again to make even more money. Given their background, more than a few are con artists, hoodwinking their way into a PC’s confidence.

Any good professional spy will have already checked out a potential PC employer before he shows up for an interview. This enables him to determine the best approach to getting what he wants from the PC.

The spy kit for thief characters is described in The Complete Book of Thieves. This type of operative is the archetypical professional spy. Low-level spy-kit thieves are more like amateurs, of course.

An amateur spy is anyone who isn’t a professional, including PCs. Not all spies are cloak-and-dagger types; anyone who collects information can be one. Many amateur spies are flaky individuals, whose motives vary widely. They are utilized primarily because there is no other option. An amateur may approach a PC, offering information or volunteering to go on a mission for cash. Some are frauds, and represent themselves as professionals. Only easy assignments offer amateurs a chance of success.

Those spies who turn traitor are usually amateurs, as are those who can be easily recruited. An NPC may betray his master because of blackmail, threats, fear, greed, flattery, or conviction. Sources of amateur spies include amoral (chaotic or neutral-aligned) hirelings, grunts, followers, criminals, social misfits, idealists, vagabonds, romantics, and thrill-seeking opportunists. These NPCs could be in the employ of a PC or his adversaries. It is not necessary that they be highly-placed to be useful; even clerks and couriers may have access to top secrets. Obviously, having someone willing to betray his side is a big asset, but it does not make him a skilled agent.

The main difference between professionals and amateurs is that the pros range from passable to exceptional in their spying skills, while amateurs are all beginners. Some amateurs will be able to improve their skills and become professionals, but they are the exception rather than the rule. Amateurs usually require a handler or case officer to direct them, while professionals operate more independently. The pros can perform a wide variety of functions, while novices are more limited. Note that professionals can readily pose as someone else, while amateurs generally operate in their normal capacity, such as merchants, shopkeepers, courtiers, or troubadours.

Many PCs have the necessary power to operate as spies on a short-term basis. This is great for single adventures, but even if successful, they are eventually identified by their opponents. Their tactics are analyzed, and the enemies take countermeasures to protect themselves and possibly even strike back. Also, the PC would probably rather be doing other things than spending all his time sneaking around in enemy territory or looking over his own shoulder at home.

The best spies are not flamboyant daredevils or death-dealing assassins, but bland and forgettable individuals. They blend in with a crowd, often taking on mundane roles. Unfortunately, even many professional agents tend to be a bit too ostentatious. The danger is stressful, and quite a few are heavy drinkers or womanizers. Spies also have their own biases, which may taint the information they report. The DM should determine personality traits for spies, and consider how they affect his performance.

While a spy, either amateur or professional, can be utilized in different types of missions, a secret agent is someone who resides or is planted in another place, and has a single role. Some are “sleepers” who remain dormant for years. Their usefulness is limited to a single area, group, or organization, but they are very difficult to expose. Secret agents who have low to middle ranking positions in government (or as a servant to an official) are very dangerous, because they’re too unimportant to attract attention, and may gain access to secrets.

Informants

Informants provide information, from gossip to state secrets. Although the most productive informants are paid snitches, anyone can become one. If a PC has insulted, ridiculed, harassed, rudely treated, or just been cheap with an NPC, then that person is a possible informant. An enemy spy will be able to mention the NPC in a casual manner, pick up on the NPCs grievances, and commiserate with him.

From there it’s a short step for the spy to persuade the NPC to tell everything he knows about the PC, ask him to learn more, and eventually have him keep an eye on the PC. In this way a clever spy can build up a network of informants around a character without exposing himself. The PC only sees the usual people in town. No shadowy figures in dark cloaks following him around, so there’s nothing to worry about. Right?

Spy missions

Spies can function openly or in secret. Spies operating openly may be diplomats, courtiers, merchants, writers, or visitors, who collect intelligence without overtly breaking laws. Usually public information is what they get, but some secrets are obtained as well. Their enemies are probably aware of this activity, but allow it as part of the spy game. The worst that can happen is to be expelled from the country.

Agents acting secretly pose as someone else and seek to gain information clandestinely. This is far more risky, because if such a pretense is uncovered, even without evidence of spying, the agent is subject to arrest and imprisonment. Getting certain secrets involves breaking and entering, and theft or copying of documents.

The difficulty of a mission depends on the depth of intelligence required and its level of protection. Simple observation is easy; finding out top secrets of the realm is extremely difficult. The time the mission takes is likewise related to the difficulty.

The mission’s success hinges on the ability of the spy, the difficulty of the mission, and the strength of the enemy’s counterintelligence operations. A mission may be partially or fully successful. A full success usually means that the enemy isn’t aware that they’ve been spied on. Even if successful, the spy might die during the mission, or the enemy could become aware of his activities.
Failure leads to several possible results. The spy may be able to continue the mission, trying another angle, perhaps, or may be in danger of discovery and have to return home for a while. The spy might have his cover “blown” and be useless for further spying in that territory. If he’s uncovered without being aware of it, he could be fed false information to deceive his spymaster, or be allowed to continue spying while the enemy tracks his movements to reveal the entire intelligence operation. He could be killed without being compromised, but few spies are that dedicated.

The spy could be captured and possibly forced to reveal everything he knows or be “turned” into a double agent. Captured spies might be held in prison in hopes of trading them for a imprisoned enemy agent. Then again, he might just be killed; the Mongols beheaded enemy spies on the spot. If the spy is a traitor or has been caught red-handed, a quick death is the most likely outcome: execution is the traditional fate of captured spies.

Double agents are spies who work for more than one side. A few do this voluntarily, in order to make more money, and keep both their employers in the dark. Some betray their employer or are coerced into it, and go to work for the other side while still pretending to be with their first employer. This can be a powerful blow against the first side’s intelligence; however, if the first employer finds this out (without the other side knowing that they know) they can deceive the other side by giving the agent spurious information. Then again, the spy could just be pretending to double, or the second side may be aware that the first side knows he’s doubling and play their own game of subterfuge. The true loyalty of double agents is always in doubt. There have been cases of triple agents and even quadruple agents, but by that time the spy is considered so untrustworthy by everyone that he loses effectiveness.

Spies have been known to defect to the opposition, fully cooperating in identifying other spies and operations. This often happens when a double agent is in danger of being exposed. Again, it is very damaging.

An agent provocateur is a spy who tries to stir up trouble by persuading the opposition to take actions which will expose them. He must become one of the opposition, and may even be involved in the actions himself. This has led to such bizarre situations as having spies assassinate officials of their own government, as happened in Russia at the end of the last century. It’s not a pretty sight.

Example: Lord Coroman Gramel establishes a fief in an area under the sway of Long Tom, a gangster organization. After an embarrassing kidnapping, the fighter leads a personal investigation which uncovers the Long Tom members and drives them from the fief. Unknown to Gramel, Long Tom reorganizes, recruits new members and insinuates them into Gramel’s new hirelings. They sabotage the Lord’s castle-building effort and bankroll various aggrieved citizens’ lawsuits against him through third parties. In return, Gramel has a thief henchman spy on the population, while one of his friends pretends to be at odds with him, and tries to smoke out Long Tom sympathizers.

All these actions are carried out by amateurs, although the Long Tom operatives have far more experience in skullduggery. Meanwhile, foreign powers have planted professional spies in Gramel’s entourage just to keep tabs on him.

The spymaster

A spymaster is a special NPC whose job is to handle intelligence matters. He has the same basic knowledge as a spy, but he does not personally engage in espionage. His primary role is to “put the pieces together,” by analyzing the intelligence his sources have gathered and make logical deductions and estimates of his adversaries’ capabilities and intentions. He must be able to direct and manage an intelligence organization. He is a shrewd judge of character, knowing the strengths and weaknesses of his spies. Finally he must be able to keep secrets, even from his employer, by only telling him what he needs to know, without revealing sources and methods.

A spymaster’s salary can be extraordinary, as much as 1,000-3,000 gold pieces per month.

Although a professional intelligence agency functions much better than a random grouping of spies, problems can arise. Excessive deviousness, excessive secrecy, and divisive competition with other agencies is possible. Some organizations manipulate information to justify and promote their existence. Others abuse their powers to suppress critics or influence leaders. In the worst case, its discovered that the spymaster is actually an enemy agent.

Magic

The use of magic provides a terrific boost for spies. Invisibility and silence conceals their actions. Teleport, fly, passwall, knock, and dimension door spells aid entry or escape. Alter, change, or polymorph self spells hide their identity. Divination-type spells such as vision, commune, contact higher plane, or legend lore can obtain hidden information. Clairaudience, clairvoyance, wizard eye, locate object, magic mirror, reflecting pool, magic font, and ESP are available to scrutinize enemies. Illusory script and secret page may be used for messages. Potions and items with similar effects are even more useful as they can be employed by spies without spell-casting ability.

Yet for every magic there is a counter. Illusions, seeming, vacancy, veil, and misdirection may befuddle intruders. Defect scrying, dispel magic, mind blank, screen, antimagic shell, globe of invulnerability, and non-detection prevent magical snooping. Know alignment, true seeing, and other detection spells can penetrate a character’s disguise. Areas or items can be protected by alarm, wizard lock, explosive runes, fire traps, wyvern watch, glyphs of warding, and forbiddance. Defensive magical items are certain to be employed by counterintelligence agents. High-security areas will be given permanent magical safeguards along with regular patrols by well-equipped spellcasters.

Skills

The following non-weapon proficiencies (NWPs) are useful for spies: direction sense, disguise, artistic ability (acting), modern languages, picking pockets and locks, forgery, heraldry, local history, reading/writing, riding, unarmed combat, etiquette, and reading lips. Valuable proficiencies from The Complete Book of Thieves include alertness, tailing, gather information, observation, and fast talking.

Larry Granato is the code name of a 37-year-old operative currently living under the guise of a computer programmer in Denver, Colorado. He has an understanding wife and a very active 5-year-old son.
The inquisitive (not to mention foolish) explorations of the famous traveler and author Volo, filtered through Elminster, have yielded details of another dragon of the North: Arveiaturace the White Wyrm, known to sailors and minstrels alike as Iceclaws, thanks to her habit of drifting low over ships sailing off the Sword Coast and plucking up crew members for quick snacks.

This venerable white dragon is feared by all sailors who ply the shipping lanes of the Sword Coast, except for those who dismiss her as a legend—until it’s too late. The Flying Hunt of Nimbral and several aerial patrols from Evermeet have fought her in midair and forced her into flight on occasion, but most ships are helpless against her diving attacks—and when crews scramble down into their holds to escape her snatching claws, she’s been known to land on a ship and tear it apart like a child opening a gift. What makes Arveiaturace so deadly is her past: she was the steed of a wizard, Meltharond Thone, who captured and tamed her. Over the centuries of her servitude, her hatred for him turned slowly to love, and she was plunged into melancholy when at last, longevity magic failing, he died (sometime around 1326 DR).

When she is especially lonely, or going into battle, Arveiaturace straps the wizard’s old palanquin on her back, and takes to the skies with his skeletal figure riding between her shoulders. A web of desperate magics spun by Meltharond in his waning days keep his bones whole and floating in proper relation to each other, so the wizard’s skeleton sits upright, turning its head to look in whichever direction Iceclaws is looking. An observer could be forgiven for thinking Meltharond is a lich or some other sort of undead, but the dragon is truly alone, save on the rare occasions when she mates with the white dragon Arauthator—occasions during which Meltharond’s skeleton is left at home, sitting and eternally looking at nothing.

The wizard may be no more than bones now, but his legacy has kept his faithful steed alive in the face of attacks from strange dragons, elves, and humans seeking to rid themselves of her hunting, and her own offspring as well, whom she drives from the Icepeak to fend for themselves as soon as they grow bold enough to try to slay her and take over her lair. Meltharond’s magical boons are twofold: he wove a mighty magic that permanently bonded Arveiaturace with a ring of spell turning, so that she enjoys all the benefits of this item, and an awaken from afar spell that allows her to trigger the wands, rods, and staves he left behind. She can cast this spell as often as desired, regardless of its level, but knows no other magic except the mending spell. She does, however, know how wizards hurl magic, what tactics they employ, and how to recognize some popular battle spells (such as fireball and lightning bolt) by their castings. This and a familiarity with various wands, rods, and staves makes her crafty in battle against mages. One such tactic is flying low in the troughs of waves, so as to entice a wand-wielding wizard to waste magic by firing at a glimpse of her, only to have his attack absorbed or turned aside by the roiling waters. Another is toppling masts down atop mages standing on decks trying to work spells.
Arveiaturace is more intelligent — and vastly more sensitive — than most white dragons, but she has all the savagery and snarling hunger for revenge of her kind. She grew so used to the company of Meltharond (who chatted with her constantly, treating her as an equal despite the spells that prevented her from attacking him) that she’s now governed by loneliness and has been known to spare sailors and others she snatches if they don’t like wizards, don’t attack her, and have the quick wits to shout out a desire to talk (or demonstrate an ability to sing) before she bites the life from them. Several humans have escaped from a snatching by Arveiaturace having endured nothing more than a month or so of conversation with the terrifying, always-suspicious, and vigilant Iceclaws. If captives refrain from attacking her or stealing anything of Meltharond’s that still lies about his rooms, largely as he left it (including many items of magic and spellbooks, some accounts say), they’ll be taken to the locale of their choice on mainland Faerûn as soon as they admit to any loneliness. It is from such former that the wider world knows details of the White Wyrm and her lair.

It would be a mistake to conclude from this that Arveiaturace is gentle, kind, or has a soft spot for humans. She is clearly looking for a companion she can trust, but evil wizards who would refrain from cheating her, doing her other harm, or trying to enslave her — and yet share her love for destruction and acquisition of treasure — are just as clearly all too rare. Her loneliness drives her to answer the calls of the white dragon Arauthator to mate, but the White Wyrm deals savagely with intruders who sail too close to the isle where she lairs, and she has been known to leave her territory to hunt down adventurers who have entered her lair and then gone elsewhere in Faerûn.

Arveiaturace is more patient than most white dragons, but when roused to battle, she loves to lose all self-control and slay and destroy until nothing remains to withstand her. She knows the winds and waves of the Sea of Swords and Sword Coast (and the Trackless Sea east of a line from Uttersea to the Wave Rocks and the northern shores of Lantan) better than any other living entity, and she is adept at sinking ships and at plucking things from masts, decks, and the waves without slowing down or tumbling into even the roughest seas. Arveiaturace seems bent on devouring a hungry dragon’s share of all Sword Coast seafarers and in making dragons and lesser races alike terrified of venturing north of Ruathym. On rare occasions she will use her skills to rescue shipwreck victims or retrieve floating items — if rewarded with generous amounts of gems and treated with respect, as an equal and not some semi-intelligent, easily-manipulated beast.

Over the years, she has developed a relationship of mutual respect with Laeral, the Lady Mage of Waterdeep, and with the seafarer and shipwright Old Aldon of Mintarn, but the White Wyrm is spoken of with awe and fear in Candlekeep: she once heard from a captive that a certain sage of that establishment had written disparagingly of Meltharond. She arrived unannounced to tear the roof from the main building, snatch up the writer, and set straight his views on the dead wizard. It’s reported that less than a month later, Laeral of Waterdeep personally delivered a freshly-printed tome from Candlekeep entitled The High History of the Mighty Mage Meltharond to the White Wyrm, and stayed with the dragon for more than a tenday, talking day and night through. She has refused to answer queries as to just what was discussed, but sailors have noticed that the White Wyrm now seems to turn a blind eye to vessels sailing near Waterdeep.

Arveiaturace’s lair

Iceclaws makes her lair in a frigid complex of caverns high up in the eastern face of The Icepeak, that isolated island south of the Sea of Moving Ice and west of Firesheer. They lie beside smaller chambers that were once the sanctum of Meltharond Thone. In fact, Arveiaturace dug her caves so that she could carefully remove the walls along one side of the wizard’s rooms, to allow her access to them with snout and claw without destroying them with her bulk.

The rock of the Icepeak is soft, crumbling easily under a dragon’s claws or a climber’s boots alike, and Arveiaturace took the time to sculpt out spaces large enough for her to turn easily in, beat her wings, and sprawl at ease. Unfortunately, such huge caverns are inherently unstable; bits of the roof keep falling when she brushes them with an upraised wing, or when she lands heavily. (Ice at the three entry caves often makes her skid as she lands. Eventually the White Wyrm may find herself at the bottom of a roofless ledge, with a fifth or more of the Icepeak that was once above her gone.)

Outside each cave entrance is a sheer drop onto jagged rocks, and few creatures dare to dwell on the Icepeak with a hungry white dragon... but there are rumors of gnome tunnels that reach up from deep under the sea into the heart of the Icepeak — and the more foolish sort of adventurers come visiting the island all too often, drawn by tales of the back wall of the deepest of the White Wyrm’s caverns: the wall that glitters from roof to floor with heaped diamonds. Those tales are true, although few mention the side-cavern crammed with Arveiaturace’s other treasure, all tumbled carelessly together: suits of armor, coins, all gems except diamonds, weapons, and other things that look important or valuable, perhaps even magical items (Iceclaws ignores likely-looking items that she seizes, using only things of magic she knows to have belonged to Meltharond). At least one golem, of the stone guardian type, lies stilly among the heaped wealth, its origin and means of control unknown. Adventurers hearing talk of the Icepeak lair in dockside taverns up and down the Sword Coast are warned that a hill of cracked and gnawed bone fragments has built up on the rocks below the caves of the White Wyrm — and that almost all of those bones belonged to human adventurers before they provided Arveiaturace with a meal.

One of the rods crafted by Meltharond can generate multiple simultaneous unseen servants, and the White Wyrm often makes use of these forces to manipulate small items that are beyond her personal reach or Dexterity, but it is thought that no creatures serve Arveiaturace in her lair or elsewhere, and that she avoids formal alliances or ties that can summon her to battle.

Arveiaturace’s domain

From the Icepeak, Arveiaturace holds sway over a territory that stretches along the Trackless Sea east of Evermeet from Tuern and the Sea of Moving Ice (where long-necked monsters lair under the ice and erupt to do battle) in the north to the shores of Lantan in the south, and east to take in the coastal shores and headlands from Tethyr north to Mount Sar beyond Waterdeep. Arveiaturace has been known to make forays into the Crag and northern Neverwinter Wood, but other dragons (notably the great green dragon Claugiyamata) dispute her right to freely enter...
WANT AN EXCITING WEEKENDS' ENTERTAINMENT?

European 1996
GAMES FAIR & FESTIVAL
5TH-8TH SEPTEMBER
LOUGHBOROUGH UNIVERSITY, LEICESTER, ENGLAND

ROCK HORROR PICTURE SHOW
FULL PARTICIPATION FESTIVAL

VAMPIRE MASQUE BALL
-INTERACTIVE GOTHIC HORROR-

WE DARE YOU TO FIND A BETTER NIGHT OUT!

TSR Limited, 120 Church End, Cherry Hinton,
Cambridge CB1 3LB, England
Tel: 01223 212517, International 44-1223-212517
Fax: 01223 248066, International 44-1223-248066

The GEN CON logo and the TSR logo are trademarks of TSR, Inc. ©1996 TSR, Inc. All Rights Reserved.
this region. The topaz dragon Ithlaragh (who dwelt near the mouth of the Icetouch) fought several vicious territorial battles with Arveiaturace in the skies over the city of Luskan — inconclusive struggles in which both dragons were badly wounded and had to retire to their lairs for long periods of recuperation. Since Ithlaragh’s recent conversion to a dracolich (assisted by the Cult of the Dragon, who provided the dragon with steady food, lair-guards, and worshipers), however, the former topaz male hasn’t bothered to defend any territory of its own.

The deeds of Arveiaturace
Humans are the favorite prey of the White Wyrm, and she spends most of each day hunting over the waves, plucking meals from the decks of ships and using her wings to flip over vessels that menace her with ballistae, fiery missiles, or spells. She drinks from freshwater cascades and lakes in the mountains of Ruathym, on Gundarlun, and on northern Alaron and the Korinn Archipelago.

When on these long hunting forays, Arveiaturace has been known to curl up and rest atop heights on Barath (tallest crag of the midsea islets known as “the Teeth”), Tonter (the most seaward of the Singing Rocks), Ulduth (the more southerly of the two seabird-haunted Weed Rocks due south of Carcathen and west of the Sea Tower of Nemesser), and even on Sunset (in the Moonshaes) and on Mintarn (in the Moonshaes) and on Mintarn itself. This last resting-perch led to her not-quite-friendship with the shipwright Aldon, but it is a spot she rarely dare to frequent today (what with Zhentarim wizards forced west by the fall of Zhentil Keep, sorcerers fled from the turmoil of Tethyr, and outlawed mages from all over the Sword Coast lands fetching up in Mintarn).

When she’s not hunting for food or ships that might hold gems, Arveiaturace stays at home, brooding over the lands fetching up in Mintarn. This is her favorite domain, generally visited only in races at the expense of her lair, and rest atop heights on Barth (tallest crag of the midsea islets known as “the Teeth”), Tonter (the most seaward of the Singing Rocks), Ulduth (the more southerly of the two seabird-haunted Weed Rocks due south of Carcathen and west of the Sea Tower of Nemesser), and even on Sunset (in the Moonshaes) and on Mintarn (in the Moonshaes) and on Mintarn itself. This last resting-perch led to her not-quite-friendship with the shipwright Aldon, but it is a spot she rarely dare to frequent today (what with Zhentarim wizards forced west by the fall of Zhentil Keep, sorcerers fled from the turmoil of Tethyr, and outlawed mages from all over the Sword Coast lands fetching up in Mintarn.

When she’s not hunting for food or ships that might hold gems, Arveiaturace stays at home, brooding over the lands fetching up in Mintarn. This is her favorite domain, generally visited only in races at the expense of her lair, and rest atop heights on Barth (tallest crag of the midsea islets known as “the Teeth”), Tonter (the most seaward of the Singing Rocks), Ulduth (the more southerly of the two seabird-haunted Weed Rocks due south of Carcathen and west of the Sea Tower of Nemesser), and even on Sunset (in the Moonshaes) and on Mintarn (in the Moonshaes) and on Mintarn itself. This last resting-perch led to her not-quite-friendship with the shipwright Aldon, but it is a spot she rarely dare to frequent today (what with Zhentarim wizards forced west by the fall of Zhentil Keep, sorcerers fled from the turmoil of Tethyr, and outlawed mages from all over the Sword Coast lands fetching up in Mintarn).
What could you do with this card?

He's good, he's really good. His deck is even better, and if you don't take him down this turn, you're toast. But what if you had Ritual of the Machine, just one of the great new powerful cards in Alliances... What could you do with this card? Find out this summer!

Alliances™, the next limited-edition expansion set for Magic: The Gathering® and Ice Age™

Over 140 new cards to add to your decks • 12-card booster packs: $2.45
Meltharond’s level seems to have been 17th (this spell operates as if cast by a 17th-level wizard when cast by Arveiaturace).

Arveiaturace’s Fate

The White Wyrm seems to heal quickly and enjoy vibrant health and strength; it is unlikely that disease will claim her. Misadventure is always a peril, and Arveiaturace’s lonely existence could end abruptly at any time, if she loses her latest battle. The Cult of the Dragon seems to be the greatest threat to her future. In addition, there are constant mutterings in Evermeet about ways to eliminate her, and young, ambitious elves may just mount a successful attempt one of these days.

On the other hand, Arveiaturace could become the scourge of the Sword Coast, invigorated anew, if someone returned Meltharond Thone to life or unlife. She could also, if Thone regained control over her and desired it so, become a messenger and a potent controlled fighting force, of much less danger to civilized folk than she is at present. In this potential, she is unique among currently powerful dragons of the North.

For the nonce, Arveiaturace’s sad life remains an inspiration to minstrels up and down the Sword Coast — and the bane of all sailors. “The White Wyrm came calling” has recently become a popular euphemism for the death of a sailor, whatever the cause.

The White Wyrm seems to heal quickly and enjoy vibrant health and strength; it is unlikely that disease will claim her. Misadventure is always a peril, and Arveiaturace’s lonely existence could end abruptly at any time, if she loses her latest battle. The Cult of the Dragon seems to be the greatest threat to her future. In addition, there are constant mutterings in Evermeet about ways to eliminate her, and young, ambitious elves may just mount a successful attempt one of these days.

On the other hand, Arveiaturace could become the scourge of the Sword Coast, invigorated anew, if someone returned Meltharond Thone to life or unlife. She could also, if Thone regained control over her and desired it so, become a messenger and a potent controlled fighting force, of much less danger to civilized folk than she is at present. In this potential, she is unique among currently powerful dragons of the North.

For the nonce, Arveiaturace’s sad life remains an inspiration to minstrels up and down the Sword Coast — and the bane of all sailors. “The White Wyrm came calling” has recently become a popular euphemism for the death of a sailor, whatever the cause.

Ed Greenwood has written more about the FORGOTTEN REALMS® campaign than any other designer or novelist, which is only fair, since he created the place. For more information on previously undescribed regions of the Realms, check out Ed’s continuing “Elminster’s Everwinking Eye” articles in POLYHEDRON® Newszine.

The Thief Who Came In from the Cold

Continued from page 18

resists disease gives a country obvious advantages, as do smelting techniques for stronger metal or mechanical looms that weave more cloth faster.

A PC might be a sleeper agent, sent out years before to establish himself. Then, when he is safely beyond suspicion and able to reach important information, he is activated. This allows a DM to introduce espionage into an established campaign without having to start a new adventuring group.

If most of the missions already detailed require a much greater reliance on Charisma, Wisdom and, well, Intelligence, covert operations, the other half of a spy’s work, generally require the physical skills of the old-time thief.

Sabotage turns up most frequently during wartime. Silent movement through the shadows is often the only way to get past guards and weaken bridge supports, foul wells, burn supplies, or sink ships.

This type of destruction may also come into play during peacetime (also known as periods of undeclared war). Wrecking the mint or collapsing a gold mine disrupts the money supply and devastates the economy. Pirates (either genuine or a disguised navy crew) might harry a country’s shipping, while creative PCs might loose monsters in the countryside, all to destabilize an enemy’s rule, thus keeping the enemy busy at home or forcing a change in government. Along the same line is stirring up discontent or encouraging rebel movements. Students of recent history can find plenty of examples of which to model adventures.

Last in the bag of “dirty tricks” is assassination. Even the most moral and enlightened of governments may find the death of one person preferable to a drawn-out war, and who better than the masters of the shadows to carry out these missions? Poison, the garrote, and the sniper’s arrow are all obvious means, but in most cases the best method — meaning that natural causes rather than assassins are blamed — work best, for both the agent and his employers. The more highly placed the target, the more planning such a mission requires, but in all cases, getting in, doing the job and escaping safely should involve risks.

For all the missions discussed, DMs must set the risk of discovery. In the AD&D® original Edition DMG, the base chance of discovery is given as a cumulative 1% per day spent on the mission, minus the spy’s level, with modifiers for the level of precautions taken and level of mission difficulty. I would recommend using a similar method, but modifiers will vary according to the individual situation. Among the factors to be considered are the agent’s level, his skills in the areas the mission will test, his familiarity with the locale, the quality of his contacts and equipment, and the countermeasures he must face. Don’t forget to take into account outside complications, such as accidents, unexpected visits and other changes in plans, or old acquaintances who inadvertently blow a cover. Not every mission should be drenched in bad luck, of course, but DMs should throw out a potential disaster now and again to keep spies alert.

Spies have been around since the first secret. Much of their real-world tasks are tedious paperwork, sifting reports for trends and useful information, but fantasy spies can take James Bond as their model and give those thieves a chance to shine.

Before his death, the sole survivor of the investigation reported that Renee Stern is a freelance writer living in Selah, Washington. She is currently at work on a novel.
The Galaxy is a tough place...

and it's about to get tougher.

Kevin Long's
VILLAINS & FOES
a sourcebook for
Cosmic Enforcers™

The newest supplement for Cosmic Enforcers focuses on the criminals and misfits of the Galaxy — from sinister villains to misguided heroes, from super-powered eco-terrorists to the mysterious Spirit Lords.

Villains and Foes also marks the return of Kevin Long to the RPG world... and the pre-eminent artist of the Robotech® RPG, now takes on the Cosmic Enforcers universe and makes it his own! Over fifty villains and organizations are depicted, as well as new archetypes, cybernetics, weapons and world information.

Written and Illustrated by Kevin Long
Cover by Brom

Witchcraft
The Age of Innocence is over.

Witchcraft. A name conjured in a dark age, laden with fear and hatred. The Craft of the Wise, persecuted for centuries. The time for hiding is over.

As Humankind grows, those who would prey on it multiply. The monsters of legend stalk the night and slay with impunity, protected by the blindness of the Mundane.

As Humankind grows, it threatens itself and all other living things. Greed and arrogance, backed by wealth and force, are the new enemy.

Written by C.J. Carella  Illustrated by R.K. Post

Witchcraft
A game of contemporary fantasy and horror.
22.95 * 3.00 S & H
ISBN 088288253-9

Meet Kevin Long & C.J. Carella at GEN CON® Game Fair '96
Booth # 419-420

Robotech® is a registered trademark of Harmony Gold USA, Inc.

Myrmidon Press
P.O. Box 1374
Royal Oak, MI 48066
The Dark Sun® campaign setting for the AD&D® game presents a fantasy world unlike any other. It’s a savage place of alien landscapes and mutated monsters, a harsh environment where metal and water are rare and death is as common as the dust in the Silt Sea.

Perhaps the greatest difference separating Athas (the world of Dark Sun) from other campaign worlds is magic. Magic works differently beneath the crimson sun. Across the burning landscape of Athas, wizards draw the energy to power their spells from the living world itself — from plants, the living soil, and even animals and humans if the wizard is strong enough. How a wizard draws this energy determines much about his outlook and moral tendencies. For this reason, Athasian wizards fall into one of two categories: defilers or preservers.

Defilers are Athasian wizards who don’t care what happens to the world around them. They care only about the power they wield and the energy they can call forth. Defilers take the living energy without thought or restraint as they seek the quickest path to power, leaving withered plants and ashen soil in their wake. Most of Athas’s devastation can be traced to defilers or to the sorcerer-kings — the ultimate defilers of the world. A defiler can never be of good alignment.

Preservers are Athasian wizards who, through care and patience, take only enough life energy to cast their spells. They make an extreme effort to leave the plants and soil they tap alive after they’ve drawn a portion of the life energy. Preservers know that they must care for the source of their power, or that power might not be there when they need it. Fundamentally opposed to defiling methods, preservers consider the defilers to be their enemies. A preserver can be any alignment, though most favor either good or neutral.

For more about Athas and its wizards, see the Dark Sun™ Campaign Setting boxed set and the new Defilers and Preservers: The Wizards of Athas accessory.

This article describes new character kits for use by Athasian wizards, adding to those presented in Defilers and Preservers. Kits are optional in the Dark Sun campaign, so check with your Dungeon Master before introducing a wizard kit into the game. Here we present four preserver kits — the gray chasseur, the obscure, the protector, and the relic seeker — and two defiler kits — the pale and the slayer.

Proficiencies

All Athasian characters must use the proficiency rules as given in the Player’s Handbook and the Dark Sun Age of Heroes rules book. New proficiencies for wizards can also be found in Defilers and Preservers.

Athasian wizard kits

Each of the kits described below are for use with Athasian wizard player characters. Pay particular attention to the requirements listed for each kit, as these define each type of wizard just as much as the special benefits do.

Gray chasseur

Gray chasseurs, or gray huntsmen, are wizards who specialize in hunting and destroying a specific breed of monster. They seek the undead, those foul creatures with a connection to the plane of the dead — the Gray.

Character class: All gray chasseurs must be preservers. These huntsmen can be multiclassed or dual-classed, and elves and half-elves often combine this class with the fighter class to devastating effect.

Races: This kit is available to all races that can become wizards — aarakocra, elves, half-elves, and humans.

Requirements: Gray chasseurs must have Constitution scores of at least 13 and Wisdom scores of at least 11. Constitution allows them to withstand the rigors of a hunt, while Wisdom grants them the mental stamina necessary to face down the fear and dangers of the undead.

Role: The undead of Athas are, for the most part, unique creatures with powers, motives, and origins that are unique to Athas. Gray chasseurs can be in charge of hunting down specific types of monsters, and they can also be leaders of a hunting party that专门 hunts these creatures.
different from others of their kind. One thinking zombie, for example, may have different abilities from another thinking zombie, and chances are that the method used to destroy one kaisharga won’t even bother the second one encountered. The nature of Athasian undead make the gray chasseur a necessity.

The gray chasseur is a combination of occult scholar, paranormal investigator, and undead executioner. This wizard gathers every scrap of information and legend concerning the undead of Athas, filing it away for when he’ll need it most. He collects relics, unusual items, and strange components — anything that might be used to create a defense or a weapon against the monsters of the Gray. He travels from village to village, watching for signs of undead activity. Then he identifies the type of creature he’ll be dealing with and devises some means for driving it off or — if possible — putting it to rest so it stops disturbing the living.

Unlike most wizards, the gray chasseur is welcomed (or at least tolerated) by the communities who need his help. A slave tribe or trading outpost troubled by some corporeal undead will often extend an invitation to a gray chasseur, figuring that a wizard is a lesser evil than the walking dead.

Other than his name and a good bit of knowledge about the subject, this wizard has no actual ties to the plane of Athasian dead known as the Gray. He doesn’t draw spell energy from the Gray (as Athasian necromancers do), nor does he commune with the dead for knowledge or power (as the pale wizard does). The gray chasseur has one goal — to become an expert on all manner and variation of undead monsters in order to be able to confront them and destroy them before they can harm the living.

Though the gray chasseur is dedicated to learning about and destroying undead, he isn’t above being paid for his services. Most will provide help to a village for whatever the community can afford, though these wizards usually seek 1 sp per HD of the monster they’re hired to destroy.

Class Modification: The gray chasseur carries, among other things, the holy symbols associated with the four elemental clerics. While not a priest by any means, the gray chasseur knows he must show respect to the priestly powers if he hopes to use their relics in the battle against the undead.

As long as the gray chasseur maintains this respect and doesn’t do anything to damage his standing with the elementals, he receives the following priest spells as he advances in level. He may cast these spells once per day, though within 24 hours of casting he must make an offering to the granting elementals or lose this ability. Examples of offerings include teaching an agricultural technique to a village elder (Earth), setting someone or something free (Air), burning anything in dedication (Fire), or adding water to an oasis pond (Water).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Level</th>
<th>Granted priest spell</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>4th</td>
<td>Invisibility to undead (Air)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6th</td>
<td>Cure disease (Fire)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8th</td>
<td>Negative plane protection (Water)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10th</td>
<td>Dispel evil (Earth)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In addition, a gray chasseur who keeps the pact gains the ability to turn undead as if he were a priest of three levels less than his experience. For example, a 4th-level gray chasseur turns undead as if he were a 1st-level cleric.

Weapon Proficiencies: Gray chasseurs have the same weapon proficiencies available to them as normal wizards, though at 9th level they treat all weapons as +1 against undead foes. They can’t bestow this bonus on any other character, as it’s a result of their own tinkering and knowledge.

Nonweapon Proficiencies: Bonus:

- Ancient history and undead lore.

Required: Religion. Recommended: Agriculture, bribery etiquette, fire-building, planes lore, survival, teaching.

Special Benefits: In addition to the priest spells and undead turning granted them due to their respect for the elemental powers and their efforts to eradicate life-threatening abominations from the Gray, gray chasseurs also receive the benefit of being respected (or at least tolerated) in communities that would otherwise drive them off for being wizards.

With the undead lore proficiency (Wisdom -1), a gray chasseur can study a particular undead creature in order to gain advantages over it. For each day of study (during which time the gray chasseur can watch and gain information on only a single type of undead creature), the wizard gets to make a proficiency check. If the check succeeds, the wizard learns one important bit of knowledge to help him fight the undead monster. Knowledge gained in this manner is accumulated in the following order, one item per day of successful study: number of undead powers, type of undead powers (learn one power per day), and possible weaknesses (learn one per day).

For every Hit Dice an undead is above the wizard’s level, the proficiency check receives a -1 penalty. For example, if a 4th-level gray chasseur attempts to study a 6 HD undead creature, the wizard’s undead lore check receives a -2 penalty (making a success Wisdom -3 or less).

Special Hindrances: Gray chasseurs must maintain their connection to the elemental powers to get the most of their special abilities. The moment a gray chasseur breaks his pact with the elementals or fails to make a proper offering, he loses the priest spell that power grants and the ability to turn undead. Without these special abilities, the gray chasseur must rely on his own knowledge and skills as a wizard to survive his battles with the creatures of the Gray.

If a gray chasseur reveals his occupation in the presence of a thinking undead (or fails at an undead lore check while trying to study the creature), that monster has a 55% chance of declaring a death hunt on the wizard. In this case, the undead won’t rest until either it or the wizard is destroyed.

Wealth Options: Gray chasseurs begin play with (3d4+3) x 30 cp.

Obscure

The obscure is a particular type of shadow wizard, one of the mages who draw energy from the plane of infinite shadow known as the Black. The obscure uses his shadow-inspired powers for espionage and to provide protection by hiding those he defends.

Character Class: Obscures are usually preservers, though it’s possible for a one-time preserver who has become a defiler to take up this kit in the service of a sorcerer-king. This kit can be combine the wizard class with any other class except cleric or druid. Obscure wizard/rangers or wizard/thieves can sometimes be found serving a specific faction of the Veiled Alliance. Bear in mind that obscure and shadow wizards have been around for a long, long time but are still considered to be rare among the wizards of Athas.

Races: Humans, elves, and half-elves can select this kit, but the dark and claustrophobic nature of the Black makes it highly unsuitable for aarakocra wizards.
Requirements: Obscures require a minimum Wisdom score of 16 and a Constitution score of 15 to withstand the mental and physical rigor of reaching into the dimension of darkness. An obscure can be of any alignment as long as one aspect of it is neutral (i.e., NG, NE, N, LN, CN).

Role: Shortly after the first shadow wizards developed centuries ago, a few of these mystics found a particular manner of employing their magic. These mystics became the obscure, a society of shadow wizards who operate in the twilight of society, moving like specters through the world of humans and demi-humans. They consider it a sacred duty to uncover secrets and shed light on the darkness that hides portions of the world.

Using their spells and abilities granted by their connection to the Black, the obscure became spies and investigators of great mystery and renown. This small order of wizards holds fast to its sacred duty, usually in the service of the various branches of the Veiled Alliance, though at least one of these wizards works for the Night Runners elf tribe. When one of these groups absolutely needs to gather information or root out a secret, if an obscure is available, the job goes to him.

The obscure who work for the Veiled Alliance use their abilities to drift from shadow to shadow as they spy on temple guards, defilers, or sorcerer-kings. They have trained themselves in stealth techniques, and they take pride in their abilities to observe, listen, and gather information.

The obscure share certain traits with other shadow wizards. Except for those who know of them and their work, most believe that those connected to the Black are evil beings. This isn’t an accurate assessment by any means, but their characteristics make such beliefs understandable. The obscure are cold, distant, with a tendency toward neutrality. They believe in balance, for without light there is no shadow. They are cold to the touch, an effect of the plane of shadow.

At 3rd level, a portion of the obscure’s body becomes living shadow. This portion is equal to 20% of the wizard’s body. Each level thereafter, another 5% portion turns to living shadow, spreading every level advancement until 50% of the wizard’s physical form has been replaced. This shadow has a permanent chill touch spell effect upon it which can be used once per level per day.

At 7th level, the obscure gains the shadow form ability. This works just like the psychometabolic science of the same name, but doesn’t require the expenditure of PSPs. This is a granted ability, not a psionic power. The wizard can assume shadow form and remain in it for a number of turns equal to his level per day.

At 9th level, the obscure’s body has become 50% living shadow. At this time, the wizard’s natural armor class drops to AC 5 because half of his form is immune to damage from non-magical weapons. Enchanted weapons hit as though he were totally physical, with a base AC 10 (not counting any bonuses for Dexterity or magical items).

Special Hindrances: The shadow stain spreading over the obscure and the chill air that hangs around them gives these wizards a reaction check penalty that increases as they advance in level: Levels 1st-3rd, -1 penalty; levels 4th-6th, -2; levels 7th-9th, -3; levels 10th and above, -4. In addition, the first time any character see the shadow stain, that character must make a saving throw vs. petrification or flee in terror — possibly raising an alarm.

In total darkness or otherwise in the absence of shadow, an obscure is cut off from the Black. Granted powers are diminished, spells must now be cast through normal preserving or defiling methods, and the obscure must make a Constitution check with a -2 penalty to withstand the sudden absence of the chilling cold. A failed check indicates that the wizard immediately suffers 1d4 hp damage.

When the obscure accesses the Black for spell energy, he must make a Constitution check to withstand the physical and mental chill of the shadow dimension. The wizard isn’t actually entering the plane, just opening a conduit through the use of his magical training. If the wizard gathers spell energy as he casts spells, a failed check inflicts 1d2 hp damage upon him and the spell fails. If the wizard gathers energy during the memorization process, a failed check inflicts 1d6+1 hp damage. He can make a second attempt, but if that fails as well he suffers another 1d6+1 hp damage and no memorization occurs that day. The obscure can’t memorize new spells until 24 hours have passed.

Finally, because of their connection to some group (the player or DM picks either a Veiled Alliance cell, a tribe, a merchant house, or a sorcerer-king), the obscure can be ordered to take an espionage mission of some sort once every two months of campaign time.

Wealth Options: The obscure begin play with (1d4+1) x 30 cp.

Palex

The palex is a particular type of necromancer, those wizards who draw magical energy from the plane of the dead known as the Gray. Unlike necromancers, however, palex seek to command and control undead, eventually ruling these creatures by becoming as undead as they are.

Character Class: Pale are always defilers, and they always have alignments of neutral evil. The pale are always pure defilers, not wanting to sully their art by attempting to combine it with any other class.

Races: Only humans and half-elves have the will and desire to become these death-wizards.

Requirements: Manipulating and maintaining the delicate balance between life and death takes a toll on these wizards. To become a pale, a defiler needs a Wisdom score of at least 16 and a Constitution score of at least 14.

Role: Through their fascination with the undead, the pale have become connected to the Gray. This connection allows them to draw the energy for spells not from plant life but from the life forces trapped in the Gray. Unlike necromancers, who study death to learn more about life and extend it for as long as possible, the pale only want to call upon undead creatures to do their bidding. With every increase in level, with every piece of knowledge gained, the pale move closer to becoming undead beings of incredible power — at least that’s what they hope for.

The pale call forth undead servants to wait upon them, defend them, and even fight for them should the need arise. They commune with undead beings to learn more about life, death, and the Gray existence that waits beyond the mortal coil.

As a member of an adventuring party, a pale can be a potent companion — provided the rest of the party can stand his ghoulish ways. It also takes a lot for the living fully to trust someone so captivated by the dead. Still, a pale’s powerful spells and abilities to turn or command undead can be useful to any adventuring party.

Class Modification: The pale favor necromantic spells, as well as spells of an offensive nature. They require a shard of obsidian that has been prepared with the essence of an undead being to maintain their connection to the Gray. Without this shard, they cast spells as if they were normal defilers.

Because the connection to the Gray is unstable at best, the pale must roll on Table XVII: Gathering Energy Through Defiling Magic to determine how many spells they can memorize each day. Instead of determining the terrain benefit for energy gathering, the table is used to represent how strong the wizard’s connection to the Gray is at the time of energy gathering. Roll to see which terrain line to use:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Roll 1d10</th>
<th>Result</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>barren</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2-4</td>
<td>infertile</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5-7</td>
<td>fertile</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8-9</td>
<td>abundant;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>lush</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Weapon Proficiencies: The pale are proficient with all weapons normally available to the wizard class. In addition, they can learn to wield any weapons made of bone without penalty.

Special Benefits: The pale learn to fashion an obsidian shard to use as a conduit for drawing energy from the Gray. This shard must be prepared through an elaborate ceremony and ritual that lasts for 1d4+2 days. At the end of this period, the pale reaches into the Gray and makes a Wisdom check. A successful check inflicts 1d4+1 hp damage on the wizard and imbues his shard with a individual life force from the Gray. With this imbued shard, the wizard maintains a constant connection to the Gray. The life force is rendered comatose, providing nothing more than the spark necessary to maintain the open conduit. If the check fails, the shard isn’t imbued and the wizard suffers 2d4+2 hp damage.

The pale have the ability to take control of unintelligent undead. This is reflected as a pale’s Wisdom score plus 5% for each of his levels. This control lasts for 1d6+1 rounds, and the number of undead that can be affected by this power is a number of Hit Dice equal to the wizard’s level times two. So, a 3rd-level pale can control up to 6 HD of unintelligent undead creatures.

Through force of will, the pale can also attempt to command intelligent undead. The chance is equal to the wizard’s Wisdom score plus 5% per level, minus the creature’s Hit Dice. So, a 3rd-level wizard with a Wisdom of 16 has a base 31% chance to command an intelligent undead. If the undead was a 6 HD monster, the chance would be reduced to 25%. This command lasts for 1d4 rounds.

At 5th level, a pale gains a constant undead companion. One undead being can be called per level that remains at the wizard’s beck and call until the creature is destroyed or a new creature is summoned (at the next level of experience). The type of creature that responds to the summons depends on the level of the pale:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Level</th>
<th>Undead Type</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>5-6</td>
<td>normal skeleton</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7-8</td>
<td>normal zombie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9-12</td>
<td>thinking zombie</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13+</td>
<td>wracked spirit</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Finally, a pale is immune to any fear caused by undead, unless that undead’s Hit Dice total exceeds the pale’s level by three or better. Then the fear affects the wizard normally. For example, a 3rd-level pale would be affected by the fear of a 6 HD undead monster.

Special Hindrances: When a pale accesses the Gray for spell energy, the wizard must make a Constitution check to withstand the negative power of the dimension. If the wizard gathers energy as he casts a spell, a failed check inflicts 1d2 hp damage and the spell fails. If the wizard gathers energy during the memorization process, a failure inflicts 1d6+1 hp damage as he drains life energy from himself instead of from the Gray. He can make a second attempt, but if that fails as well he suffers another 1d6+1 hp damage and no memorization occurs that day. The pale can’t memorize new spells until 24 hours have passed.

Additionally, the pale have the look of death about them. They have pale flesh (as their name implies), and they are skeletal and gaunt to an unnatural extreme. The pale are also surrounded by a carrion stench — they smell like ghouls. This makes everyone they meet very uncomfortable, and if the pale doesn’t make a successful save vs. death magic whenever he encounters someone, that person flees in terror.

Wealth Options: The pale, too preoccupied by death to worry about money, begin play with (1d4+1) x 10 cp.

Protector

The protector is an elf wizard dedicated to the defense of his tribe. He combines magic with warrior skills to create a true combat mage. Indeed, protectors are among the most ferocious and dangerous elf opponents enemies of an elf tribe can face.

Character Class: Protectors must be preservers, as defilers don’t have the commitment or honor necessary to adhere to the tenets of this kit. In addition, a protector must be a multiclassed fighter/wizard of some kind.

Races: Only elves may become protectors, though a DM may rule that a half-elf who’s dedicated to a particular slave tribe might become that tribe’s protector.

Requirements: Only the best elves can meet the standards set for this kit. A protector must have a Strength score of 13 or better, a Constitution score of 12 or better, and an Intelligence score of 14 or better.

Role: Protectors defend their tribes from all threats and dangers, using magic and muscle to keep those they have sworn to protect from harm. Not every fighter/mage can rise to the standards of this kit, for it takes skill, commitment, compassion, and a dedication not seen very often among the elves of Athas.

An elf tribe usually has one designated protector at a time. This elf receives the traditional weapon of protection to use in defense of the tribe. This weapon is a bone long sword +3 that’s sometimes imbued with an additional power depending on the tribe it belongs to. For example, one tribe might have a thri-kreen slayer, while another has an undead slayer, each inflicting extra damage (usually becoming a +5 weapon) against their dedicated foes. The protector ranges far from the tribe for months at a time, seeking any threats long before the tribe is placed in danger.

When traveling with the tribe, the protector runs at the head of the tribe in a place of honor reserved just for him. He provides consul to the chief and tribal elders, trains tribal defenders, and keeps alert for any dangers. When danger presents itself, the protector often leads the tribe into battle, wielding the tribal sword where all can see. He inspires the tribe, casting magic and striking quickly with his enchanted sword.

Class Modification: Protectors always seek to learn spells that can be used to defend their tribes. Offensive spells are selected first, followed by spells that can be used to defend those in their care. Some protectors even learn divination spells in order to gain as much warning to dangers as possible.

Weapon Proficiencies: Protectors can learn to use any weapons, though they must select the long sword among their initial proficiencies.

Special Benefits: At 3rd level, a protector is only a protector-in-training. He receives a bone long sword +1 to use until his training period ends. During training, the protector-to-be travels with the tribe’s protector for one month per level. The rest of the time he is encouraged to find an adventuring party to join with to further hone his abilities.

At 5th level, the training period ends. If the tribe’s protector is ready to step down from his post, the new protector receives the bone long sword +3. If not, the young protector is encouraged to keep traveling until such time as his tribe has need of his services.

A protector carries around a pouch full of items that are important to his tribe. With this pouch, the protector and the tribe are always connected. At 5th level, a protector gains danger sense in relation to his tribe. With this ability, he knows when his tribe needs him and can follow the tingling sensation right to them. This ability works best as long as he’s within 10 miles of the tribe; at farther distances the tingling is too weak to do more than warn him that something is amiss. If the protector loses the pouch, he loses this ability.

Due to his training and combat orientation, a protector receives extra offensive spells to memorize every day. Up to 5th level, he receives an extra 1st-level spell; from 6th to 9th level he receives two extra 1st-level spells; from 10th to 12th level he receives two 1st-level and one 3rd-level spell; at 13th level and above, his extra spells are two 1st-level and two 3rd-level spells.

Special Hindrances: Through the connection formed by the tribal pouch, a protector must respond to a summons from his tribe. The tribal shaman can use the pouch to summon the protector, and any true threats to the tribe also force the protector to respond.

If a protector’s tribe is ever destroyed and the protector survives, he becomes an avenger. An avenger wanders the land, seeking to protect others from whatever danger destroyed his tribe. He also seeks to avenge the tribe by hunting down and eliminating whatever destroyed them — though this isn’t always an easy task.

Wealth Options: Protectors begin play with little money, only (1d4+1) x 5 cp, but they do receive a bone long sword +1.

---

Relic Seeker

Relic seekers are wizards who search for ancient items. They look for books, scrolls, tablets, metal tools — anything tied to the past that can increase their knowledge or otherwise help them piece together the mysteries of ancient Athas.

Character Class: Preservers normally take the relic seeker kit, as they are more concerned with preserving not only nature and life, but even the past. Defilers can select this kit, but they do so more to increase their own power than for any love of knowledge or desire to unlock ancient mysteries. When multiclassed, the only other class that logically combines with relic-seeking wizards is the thief class.

Races: Any race that can become a wizard can select this kit. Aarakocra and humans make the best relic seekers, but there have been relic seekers among the elf tribes, and even a half-elf or two has dug into the ruins of yesterday to learn more about the world.

Requirements: Relic seekers have only two Ability Score requirements — they must have Intelligence scores of at least 12 and Wisdom scores of at least 11. Otherwise, a relic seeker can be of any alignment as long as one of its aspects is lawful.

Role: Relic seekers are scholars of the highest order, curators who locate, catalog, and carry their museums with them wherever they go. Most relic seekers aren’t interested in power. They’re historians or sages who simply want to learn and preserve that learning for others. Any power that might come their way through this course is simply an added bonus.

Relic seekers are adventurers in the classic sense — they’ll go anywhere, brave any danger, to recover a relic, learn a new bit of information, or discover an ancient secret. Tall mountains, deep caverns, ancient ruins — these are the obstacles the relic seekers learn to circumvent in the pursuit of knowledge. Relic seekers will join adventuring groups to gain assistance in their work, for everyone knows that adventurers spend lots of time in just the sort of places a relic seeker can uncover some piece of the past.

Artifacts, historical accounts, spells and magical items, objects of art, even odd bits of metal — these are the treasures that relic seekers constantly search for. It’s their passion, the driving force that defines their ultimate motivations.
In a world where reading and writing is prohibited, where the secrets of the past are considered better left buried, the relic seekers see it as their duty to preserve and often rescue such items from the forces that would destroy them.

Class Modification: Divination spells are clearly part of every relic seeker’s repertoire. They also tend to have lots of uses for abjuration magic.

Weapon Proficiencies: Relic seekers have the same weapon proficiencies available to them as normal wizards.

Nonweapon Proficiencies:
- Bonus: Ancient history and ancient languages.
- Required: Reading/Writing. Recommended: Appraising, bribery etiquette, direction sense, rope use, somatic concealment, teaching.

Special Benefits:
- Every relic seeker starts play with a minor magical item of some sort (as selected by the DM). For every magical item and ancient relic they collect, they receive a 5% bonus to their awarded experience.
- Relic seekers learn how to identify ancient items with some success. They have a 5% chance per level of being able to identify an item as genuine or magical in nature. They can attempt this identification process once per item, regardless of the result they come up with. (DMs might want to make the check in secret for the relic seeker.)
- Finally, to reflect the time relic seekers spend digging through ancient ruins, they get to buy skills that are usually only available to thieves. They receive 15 points at 3rd level (the starting level for DARK SUN characters) and 5 points each new level to put into these skills. The skills and their base scores are:
  - Open Locks 0%, Find Traps 0%, Climb Walls 15%, Read Languages 10%.

Special Hindrances: Curiosity killed the mekillot, and it certainly gets the relic seeker into trouble. Whenever the relic seeker picks up a rumor concerning an artifact or other worthy item, he must make a successful Wisdom check to keep from rushing to immediately find it. If the check fails, he’s off at the first opportunity.

As scholars, relic seekers often have their attention turned toward matters beyond the here and now. The first round of any combat, the relic seeker suffers a 2-point penalty to his initiative roll, and in any location other than ruins or while on a relic hunt, the relic seeker is always surprised.

Finally, when traveling in a place where reading and writing is prohibited, such as the city-states of Urik and Nibenay, the relic seeker must be extremely careful not to give himself away. This can be harder than it sounds, as they always carry scrolls, tablets, and other ancient artifacts in the many pouches and bags they wear.

Wealth Options: Relic seekers begin play with \((1d4+2) \times 30\) cp and a minor magical item of the DM’s choice.

Slayer

Slayers are wizards who profit from their art by selling their services to the highest bidder. However, the services they sell are very specific — they use their magic to kill. Wielding their magic the way a bard wields poison daggers, slayers take contracts for merchant houses, nobles, and sorcerer-kings, earning fortunes if they’re good at what they do.

Character Class: All slayers must be defilers, as preservers have too much respect for life so callously to end it. Multiclass slayers are possible. Among elves, these wizards often combine with the fighter or thief classes. Half-elf slayer/bards make for a most dangerous combination.

Races: Elves, half-elves, and humans can select to follow the dark path of the slayer. Aarakocra wizards would never take on this role.

Requirements: Slayers have no Ability Score requirements beyond the normal ones for their race and class. However, the best slayers (those who survive to make a name for themselves) usually have the highest scores. Slayers may not be of good alignment; most tend toward some aspect of neutrality, though the worst among them are evil.

Role: Slayers, like Athasian bards, have a specific function in Athasian society. They sell their abilities to society’s elite, eliminating a merchant’s competition, a rival noble, a pushy templar, or an adventurer who just doesn’t know when to back off. Most slayers never reveal their true nature, not even to their adventuring companions. They travel the Tablelands and beyond with these companions, slipping away when necessary to handle a job, then returning to continue their adventuring careers. Slayers are in high demand, but even the best isn’t called upon to perform more than three or four slayings in a year.

When a slayer takes a job, he watches his target for a few days. This gives him the opportunity to chart his victim’s movements, watch for habits or abilities his employer forgot to warn him of, and gauge the protection he must circumvent to get close to his target. When he’s ready, the slayer picks the appropriate spells and begins his onslaught.

Unless specifically asked to put on a big show (which costs more as this puts the slayer at greater risk), a slayer employs spells of a subtle yet deadly nature. Necromantic spells used over a number of days can appear as a withering disease of unknown origin. Illusions can be used to literally scare a victim to death or cause a victim to blunder into a fatal accident. Even summoning magic can be employed to send wild creatures or dangerous monsters to deal with the victim. Every slayer has his own specialty and signature method for completing a job.

In the case of half-elf slayer/bards, the wizard might even be audacious enough to get close to his victim, entertain him, befriend him, and then deliver the death-dealing spell once the victim’s trust has been gained.

Class Modification: Even more than other wizards, slayers keep their profession a secret. Nothing stirs up a mob faster than the revelation of a wizard who uses his magic for murder. So, a slayer works hard to keep his identity as a defiler secret and never reveals his nature as a slayer except to those who have the money to afford his services.

In the case of half-elf slayer/bards, the wizard might even be audacious enough to get close to his victim, entertain him, befriend him, and then deliver the death-dealing spell once the victim’s trust has been gained.

Every slayer picks a signature method for dealing death — spells of a subtle and quiet nature. In addition, all slayers also learn a few obviously offensive spells to use if the need arises — spells like fireball and lightning bolt. Finally, it makes good sense for a slayer to also have a few spells on hand to use when he needs to make a quick escape. Dimension door and teleport work well for most slayers.

Weapon Proficiencies: Slayers have the same weapon proficiencies available to them as normal wizards.

Special Benefits: A slayer starts play with a patron, a specific noble or merchant lord who retains his services. This translates into help when the slayer is within the patron’s sphere of influence, a ready supply of resources while in the patron’s good graces, and a contact to exploit when involved in his own adventuring endeavors.

Special Hindrances: The patron also translates into the slayer’s hindrance, as the slayer must perform at least three assassinations for the patron in a given year. When a slayer agrees to a job, he must concentrate on that job until he gets it done. Otherwise, he may find himself the object of a chasseur (or mage hunter) who has been hired to cancel his contract.

Because slayers are even more despised and feared than other defilers, a slayer always runs the risk of being revealed for what he is. Even a patron or client may turn on him, and he never knows who to trust. Consequently, slayers learn to sleep with one eye open and a spell on their lips.

Wealth Options: Slayers begin play with (3d4+3) x 30 cp.

ESDEViUM, the GAMES shop

THE MAIL-ORDER SPECIALISTS

from Mind Ventures

Don’t Look Back RPG (2nd Ed.) $14.95
Giant Psychic Insects from Outer Space $9.95 from Westland

Point Blank RPG $4.99
Maji RPG $5.99
Dance Like RPG $4.99
Killing Ground $4.99
from Azure Wish

Rosyia 1917 (Russian Civil War) $47.95
Hispania (Britannia variant) $44.95
Europe Universalia (1492-1792) $49.95 from New England Simulations

Dresden 1813 $24.95
from Games USA

Eagles of the Empire: Bonding $29.95
Eagles of the Empire: Friedland $29.95 from Stellar Publishing

Ace Agents RPG $3.95
Co-author's Screen & Acc $1.50
ACE Supers $3.95
Nightlife RPG (2nd Ed.) $13.95
Magic Supplement $3.95
In the Musical Vein $3.95
Red Cell & City Plunge $3.95
Afterdark Americana $3.95
Kontoro America $3.95
Night Move $3.95
These are just some of our games. Our catalog contains details of virtually all games available in the US. Send 29c in stamps & 29c SASE (over 4 stamps) for a copy FREE with orders over $2.

Phone Orders: (021252) 20116 or Fax: (021252) 24963

Come to Esdevium Games and see the best display of games in the country.

Fastest telephone mail order service

from Steve Jackson Games

Illuminati: New World Order (unid. edn.) $19.95
GURPS Athlete (121 cards) $6.95
Assassins Boosters (8 cards) $1.20
from White Wolf

Werewolf RPG (2nd Ed.) $16.99
Screen (2nd Ed.) $3.99
Rage Across the Amazon $9.99
Black Furies Tribe Book $5.99
Some Gunners Tribe Book $5.99
Children of Gaia Tribebook $5.99
Fianna Tribebook $5.99
Frank Lodj $8.99
Get of Fenris TB $3.99
Glass Walkers Tribebook $5.99
Player's Guide to Werewolf $10.99
Project Twilight $6.99
Rage Across Australia $8.99
Rage Across Appalachia $8.99
Rage: Warriors of the Apocalypse $10.99
Red土耳其 Tribebook $6.99
Rite of Passage $5.99
Shadowwords Tribebook $5.99
Valkens Foundation $6.99
Ways of the Wolf $5.99
Werewolf Slaughterer's Handbook $10.99
Who's Who Among Werewolves Garou Saga $5.99
Drain Around the Fire (short stories) $4.99
T-shirts (L/XL) $11.99

Rage: Werewolf Collectable Card Game

 Starter Pack (Unltd.) $3.99

 Booster Pack (Unltd.) $3.99

 Unholy Boosters (Unltd.) $1.50

 Wyrms Boosters (Unltd.) $1.95

 War of the Amazons (Unltd.) $1.40

ESDEVIUM GAMES (G1)

6 Wellington Street
Aldershot, Hants GU11 1OZ
(021252) 311443 (Shop Hours)
(021252) 722269 (Other Times)
Fax: (021252) 24613

---

Bill Slavicsek lives, works, and plays too many games in Lake Geneva, WI. He is a designer and editor for TSR, Inc. and knows more about the Star Wars universe than any mortal should know.
It's no trouble at all to report that Guardian's Key may well be Anne Logston's strongest novel to date. Trying to classify the book, however, is another matter entirely. It isn't capital-L Literature of the "reading this will be good for you" school. As with Logston's previous books, her intent is clearly to entertain, and it's a task at which she succeeds admirably. She doesn't entirely escape the bounds of literary nutrition, as there are a handful of thematic vitamins and minerals scattered through its pages, but Logston's tale definitely doesn't qualify as the fantasy-novel equivalent of 100% Bran Flakes.

Neither, however, is this book "popcorn fantasy" in the usual sense of that phrase — a book meant purely as escapist adventure, whose sole value is as a distraction from real life. While sometimes used as such, the "popcorn" label isn't necessarily a pejorative; it can legitimately mark everything from Conanesque blood-and- thunder yarns to tales of the Forgotten Realms® setting to Star Wars novels to comic fantasy such as Terry Pratchett writes. But Guardian's Key is none of these; there's a thoughtful quality to the novel that sets it above the storytelling equivalent of mere snack food, and a major plot element deals with the consequences of a cruelly intimate betrayal.

It isn't exactly an adventure story, although its heroine, one Dara, has a fair number of adventures as she explores the vast labyrinth of realities branching outward from the mysterious Crystal Keep. True enough, she meets a dragon, is set upon by imps, and encounters a mysterious woman out of legend, but just as much of the story involves cooking and mending and studying dusty books — and all of these are just as important to the plot as the more adventurous incidents. Impressively, though, Logston narrates even the most mundane episodes without lapsing into dullness.

It's not really a romance, even though the motive behind Dara's quest involves sealing a marriage contract. Her intended husband spends nearly the entire book offstage, and the relationship that develops between Dara and the Crystal Keep's mysterious Guardian, Vanian, is considerably more three-dimensional than the word "romance" might suggest.

Nor is it precisely a fairy tale or fable, though Logston incorporates elements of both. There are familiar characters and props — a peppery old witch, a magic mirror, a magical key. The prose conveys the once-upon-a-time mistiness typical of fairy tales, and Dara's ultimate choices reflect the increased self-knowledge that usually accompanies a fable's moral. But Logston develops her themes more subtly and with less preaching than fables usually offer, and while the ending is cheerfully upbeat, it doesn't have a fairy tale's happily-ever-after simplicity.

Just because Guardian's Key can't be pigeonholed, however, is no reason not to enjoy the book. With this novel Anne Logston carves out a new niche for herself and sets a standard that other fantasy novelists may well find difficult to meet or exceed.

© 1996 John C. Bunnell

Guardian's Key
Anne Logston
Ace
$5.99

The Two Georges
Richard Dreyfuss and Harry Turtledove
Tor
$23.95

By almost any measure, The Two Georges is not the book you'd expect it to be. It's not a publicity-stunt novel; all evidence says that actor Richard Dreyfuss was an equal partner in the project with veteran writer Harry Turtledove. It's not the sort of quiet, contemplative yarn you might expect from Dreyfuss; rather, it's an action-adventure tale with express-train pacing and a Harrison Ford hero. Nor, however, is it crisp, cogent alternate history such as you'd expect from Turtledove, who's usually regarded as that sub-genre's leading craftsman.

Not that the setting isn't intriguing. In the world Dreyfuss and Turtledove create, 1990s America is part of the British Empire, a treaty signed in the 1760s by George Washington and King George III having prevented the Revolutionary War. The legendary Gainesborough painting that commemorates the event has just arrived in California to begin a national tour, and Thomas Bushell of the Royal American Mounted Police is in charge of the security arrangements.

For Bushell, though, air travel is by dirigible, automobiles are steam-powered, and television is just becoming available as a curiosity for the wealthy. It’s a colorful landscape, but the vintage technology is oddly assorted and the explanation for its presence nonexistent. The steam-cars date to around 1920 in real history, while the airships are at least ten years more advanced, and both are in much wider use than ever occurred in our own world.

The steam-cars date to around 1920 in real history, while the airships are at least ten years more advanced, and both are in much wider use than ever occurred in our own world.

The politics are equally peculiar: Britain’s chief rivals in world affairs are a French-Spanish collective and the Russian empire; the Chinese and Ottomans are under British rule; the Germans are insignificant; and many Native Americans enjoy a reclusive semi-independent status. Yet though the civil rights movement seems never to have happened, North America’s chief administrator is none other than Sir Martin Luther King, while a certain “Tricky Dick is a wealthy used-car magnate, and the Sons of Liberty are dangerous terrorists.

What handicaps the novel is an odd combination of too much and too little detail. Turtledove and Dreyfuss go to considerable lengths to make sure that we know the broad outlines of this world’s history and the dates of key events, and a pair of maps clearly describe the political landscape. Yet at the same time, they’re curiously reticent about why events unfolded as they did, especially when it comes to justifying some of the sharper divergences from real-world history. It’s a mystery, for instance, as to why this world has evolved so differently, and the puzzle is an ongoing distraction that detracts from Dreyfuss’ and Turtledove’s primary interest.

Yet while the novel is remarkably weak as alternate history, it works very well as a spy thriller. Once the Sons of Liberty make off with the title painting, through bullet-riddled fire-fights and intrigue-ridden diplomatic receptions. Not surprisingly, there’s a definite cinematic quality to much of this, and it’s the sort of adventure that should translate well to film.

Those who enjoy high-spirited post-Victorian adventure will probably find The Two Georges a lively and personable read. But those with any taste for well-realized historical speculation should look elsewhere, and Turtledove fans in particular may find this novel below his usual standard.

The Two Georges

Alan Dean Foster

Novels based on computer games aren’t especially new — we’ve seen books spun out from the worlds of The Bard’s Tale*, Wing Commander*, the Ultima* adventures, and many more. Most of these, however, have been original stories set in the world established for the game. The Dig is different; Alan Dean Foster’s book looks to be a straightforward novelization of the game adventure itself.

A couple of warnings are in order at this point. First, I haven’t actually played through the CD-ROM version of the story. I have, however, spent time with the game, and I’ve seen and absorbed the walk-through in the official strategy guide. Second, those who don’t want the game’s ending spoiled should skip to the next review. While Foster’s novel isn’t a hint book, it sticks sufficiently close to the CD-ROM script that those wishing to be surprised should finish their chosen version of the story before seeking out its companion piece.

You don’t need to get farther than the cover art, though, to figure out that The Dig is the Spielberg/Lucas empire’s homage to the film version of 2001: A Space Odyssey. The blend of wide-eyed awe and crisp professionalism is much the same, and The Dig’s ruggedly exotic landscapes are a match for 2001’s mysterious obelisk. The two stories diverge sharply in plot and character development, but the atmosphere and themes are dead ringers for each other.

Novel and game follow the same path; an unusual asteroid has suddenly appeared from nowhere on a near-collision course with Earth, and astronaut Boston Low is brought out of retirement to fly the NASA mission that will hopefully nudge it into Earth’s orbit instead. But Low and his fellow crew members quickly discover that the asteroid isn’t what it seems, and they are transported to the distant and seemingly dead world of Cocytus. Only if they can somehow unravel the planet’s secrets and revive long-idle technological systems is there hope of returning to Earth.

When Foster is unfolding the Cocytan landscape and architecture, his prose pleasantly complements the visually cinematic quality of the computer game. Foster also provides a lightly sketched attraction between Low and journalist Maggie Robbins, and this too is effectively-conveyed — a distinct plus for the book. On the minus side, however, Foster also deliberately undercuts any suspense in the plot by switching often to the viewpoint of the hordes of disembodied Cocytans watching the human explorers from the parallel dimension in which the aliens are trapped. The general outline of the Cocytans’ problem is apparent to the reader long before Low and Robbins (and thus, by implication, the game-player) have any idea of what’s going on around them. It’s a strange choice, all the more so because the viewpoint-shifts are handled in an oddly abrupt, inelegant fashion.

Overall, The Dig in both its forms looks to be a solidly traditional science-fiction puzzle yarn. This is one case, though, where there seems little reason to seek out the story in more than one form; those who’ve successfully played the game are unlikely to find much of interest in the book, while those who finish the novel first have little apparent reason to invest in the game. The tale is entertaining enough, but not so memorable that it stands up well to multiple retellings.

War in Tethyr

Victor Milan

TSR $5.99

If War in Tethyr were investigated by the Better Business Bureau, it might well find itself accused of false advertising. Though it’s billed as part of a series about the nobles of the Forgotten Realms setting, protagonist Zaranda Star is about as likely a titled lady as Roseanne Barr. And while the title promises a war, there’s little in the way of straightforward military conflict within the books pages. Neither of these factors, however, prevents Victor Milan’s novel from being a clever and entertaining saga set in a part of the Realms far removed from the familiar paths linking Waterdeep with the Dales.

Unlikely or not, Zaranda does hold the title of Countess Morninggold, but she’s still making payments on the castle that goes with the rank. And her aides and associates are a wildly assorted lot even by Tethyrian standards — her horse talks, the castle steward is a bugbear, and one of her newest companions is an orog who claims to be a paladin of Torm.

Left to herself, Zaranda would just as soon rest in her chambers and recover from her recent travels, which have included such lively lands as Thay and the Tuigan frontier. But circumstances won’t let her; the usual simmer of intrigues in Zazesspur, Tethyr’s nominal capital, is coming to a boil, and if Zaranda doesn’t act to protect her interests, her status in Morninggold may be in danger.

Milan takes this foundation and builds on it an adventure that’s both surprisingly mild-mannered and more tangled than a ball of yarn after six cats are through playing with it. Zaranda, trained both in magic and swordcraft, must use both skills in an effort to keep the already dangerous political climate from erupting into full-blown violence. But mere political enemies may not be the most critical threat — something even more sinister is operating beneath the surface, both literally and figuratively.

Milan stage-manages both Zaranda’s group and their diverse enemies with practiced skill, displaying both an admirable grasp of tactics and a clever hand at springing plot twists. While very few readers will correctly anticipate every change of allegiance, at no time does Milan offer a revelation that hasn’t been justified by earlier events.

If there’s a criticism to be leveled, it’s that War in Tethyr sometimes feels like the second volume of Zaranda’s adventures — and I don’t recall seeing such an earlier tale. The origins of her talking horse are a mystery that the current book declines to explain, and the hints of prior adventures occasionally feel as if there’s something specific but unrevealed behind them. But as flaws go, this one is both small and easily remedied; Milan simply needs to write and publish the earlier story. (Or, if my memory is failing me and the prequel already exists, TSR needs to include mention of it somewhere in subsequent printings of the present book so that readers can track it down.) Zaranda Star is too likeable a heroine to abandon after just one adventure.

The Gates of Twilight

Paula Volsky

Bantam Spectra $12.95

There’s no doubt that Paula Volsky’s newest novel aspires to a grand scale — not when its ultimate villain is a god-gone-mad, much of the action takes place in a towering temple complex crawling with assassin-priests, and the cast ranges from royalty to beggars to bureaucrats. Yet for all its rich, panoramic scenery, The Gates of Twilight dwells too much on side trips and travelogues to sustain the high-energy adventure it tries to hang on its initial premise.

Three interwoven plots form the heart of the novel: a cultural and political clash between the traditional monarch of Kahnderule and the more modern civilization of Vonahr, the efforts of the Cult of Aoun to steal power from both realms, and the gradual bond that forms between Vonahrish civil servant Renille vo Chaumelle and Jathondi, the heiress to Kahnderule’s throne. But that’s not enough for Volsky; she adds several more subplots to the mix that connect only loosely to the main adventure — the foibles of Renille’s family have little impact on the political intrigues, and Renille’s encounters with a clan of urban street-folk likewise don’t advance the core story. Yet these elements take up pages at a time, diverting attention from the shadowy agents of Aoun and the deeper textures of the cultural conflict.

That’s a shame, because the parts of the book that do focus on the primary plots show style and ingenuity. The Aoun-Father’s assassins, aided by deadly flying serpents called wivooori, are a clever hybrid of Oriental ninjas and the thuggee of India. The magically sealed library in which Jathondi and Renille must seek the key to Aoun’s defeat is well-imagined, and the key to its unlocking is neatly constructed. And the relationship Volsky builds between these two unlikely allies is drawn with assured, light strokes.

But the cleverness is too well-muted. Too many scenes fail to advance the story, and the rich, descriptive style that Volsky adopts — while it fits the mood and society she establishes — assures that she can’t simply rush through the extraneous subplots and get back to the main adventure.

Part of the difficulty may be that Volsky has tried too hard to give the tale the trappings of genre fantasy. In atmosphere, there’s a decidedly Kipling-like feel to the book, and the setting has a definite resonance with the British Empire’s efforts to extend its influence over the jungles and maharajahs of India. But the names of places and people are determinedly artificial, perhaps a little too much so. As it is, Volsky must spend time and space developing her invented world’s flora and fauna that would have been better used on action-sequences and plot development.

Again, when The Gates of Twilight is on track, it’s as skillful and suspenseful a RIDERS'S MAIL ORDER
• HUGE SELECTION!
• LOW PRICES!
• FAST SERVICE!
EVERYTHING WE SELL IS AT LEAST 30% LESS THAN RETAIL!

NEW TSR RELEASES FOR JULY!
TSR2621 Hellbound: The Blood War
  - PLANESCAPE" Accessory and Adventure
TSR9524 Volo's Guide to the Dalelands
  - FORGOTTEN REALMS® Accessory
TSR2445 Defilers and Preservers: Wizards of Athas
  - DARK SUN® Accessory
TSR1127 4th Edition SPELLFIRE® Starter Deck
TSR1156 DRACONOMICON™ Booster Pack - for SPELLFIRE®
TSR9521 I, Tyrant - MONSTROUS ARCANIA" Accessory
TSR9522 Eye of Pain - MONSTROUS ARCANIA" Adventure
TSR9523 Death Unchained - RAVENLOFT® Adventure
TSR8569 Murder in Transi
  - DRAGONLANCE® Saga Hardcover Novel
TSR8566 Silver Shadows
  - FORGOTTEN REALMS® Harpers Novel
TSR2617 Abyssal Warriors - PLANESCAPE" Novel
TSR8733 The Gilly Dwarves - DRAGONLANCE® Novel
TSR3114 The Hag's Contract - BIRTHRIGHT™ Novel

RIDER'S MAIL ORDER carries everything available for all the games you play!
ADVANCED DUNGEONS & DRAGONS®, CALL OF CTHULHU, CASTLE
FALKENSTEIN, CHAMPIONS,
CHANGELING, CYBERPUNK 2020,
EARTHDAYN, ELRIC,
EPIC SPACE MARINE, GURPS,
HEAVY GEAR, MAG, MEKTON ZETA, MIDDLE EARTH,
MUTANT CHRONICLES, NECROMUNDA,
OVER THE EDGE, PARANOIA, RIFTS, ROLEMASTER, SHADOWRUN,
STAR WARS, VAMPIRE,
WARHAMMER 40,000, WARHAMMER
FANTASY BATTLES, WEREWOLF, WRAITH, AND MORE!

NEW WEB PAGE!
Rider's old Web page was great but our new Web page is AMAZING!
CHECK IT OUT!
http://riders.com

Magic:The Gathering!
Starter Deck (60 cards) retail $8.95 Rider's $6.27
Starter Deck Box (10 Decks) retail $89.50 Rider's $62.70
Booster Pack (15 cards) retail $2.95 Rider's $2.07
Booster Pack Box (36 Boosters) retail $106.20 Rider's $74.52

Our prices are so low that a certain west coast game company won't allow us to print them in their own magazine! We don't understand why not either.

TO ORDER 1-800-RIDERS®
PLEASE CALL 1-800-743-3779
Question Line (313) 668-6151
International Customers (313) 668-0836
Fax Number (313) 668-8722
email: info@riders.com URL: http://riders.com

*Additional charges apply to orders outside the continental U.S. MI residents add 6% sales tax. Advertised prices good until 08/01/96. Riders is a registered trademark of Rider's, Inc. Unless otherwise noted: ® and ™ designate trademarks owned by TSR, Inc.

Hours: M-F 10-9 SAT 12-8
EASY PAYMENT TERMS
We accept Visa, Discover, Mastercard and Money Orders. Please no checks.

Orders over $100.00
FREE Shipping and Handling!
Otherwise add $4.95*

MAILING ADDRESS
115 W. Liberty Ann Arbor, MI 48104
Roller-coaster ride as one might wish. But too much of the book is spent rolling sedately along a flat course around the edges of the amusement park. The result is a world that’s mildly entertaining to visit, but not worth the summer-season ticket price. Best advice here is to wait for the mass-market edition.

Recurring Roles

Two recent hardbacks compete for the status of most-anticipated series entry in recent months. The first of these is The Hedge of Mist (HarperPrism, $22.00), which brings Patricia Kennealy-Morrison’s “Tales of Arthur” Celtic triad to a close in high style. As usual, this Celts-in-space saga is narrated with an assured hand and a crisp sense of language, and the present volume finds Kennealy-Morrison putting a decidedly unusual spin on the legends surrounding Arthur and the Holy Grail. The author’s taste for pagan and neo-pagan legend shows a little more strongly in this book than in her earlier novels, but the result adds to its intriguing quality rather than detracting from it.

Second, of course, is David Weber’s Honor Among Enemies (Baen, $21.00), the first of the Honor Harrington adventures to debut in hardcover. It’s a satisfyingly thick volume, with plenty of action and a fistful of intriguing subplots. One of these, involving a would-be mutineer, is paid off rather abruptly toward the volume’s end, but otherwise the series is as strong as ever, with engaging heroes and a wide-ranging cast of adversaries. One subtle and amusing design element is worth noting; a quick riffling of the illustrated corners of the books pages produces a clever “flipbook” combat scene.

Sharon Shinn’s Archangel (Ace, $13.95) is utterly unlike her first novel, The Shape-Changer’s Wife, but it’s no less compelling for all that. Science fiction rather than fantasy, it takes readers to a highly unusual world where only the combined efforts of angels and humans can keep planetary disaster at bay — no small challenge amid a host of unthinkable betrayals and deadly rivalries. Both the romance and the language here are somewhat less striking than those of her prior book, but Shinn is still a skillful, highly inventive storyteller, and this new tale is not to be missed.

Scholar of Decay (TSR, $5.99) is veteran writer Tanya Huff’s contribution to the Ravenloft milieu, and as might be expected, Huff provides a clever and well-crafted yarn involving estranged brothers marked for tragedy by a clan of were-rats. What’s interesting about this book is that Huff manages both to retain her own flair for smooth characterization and to evoke a setting that feels consistent with the larger AD&D® game universe. This has been a problem in a number of the Ravenloft® books, and it’s good to see that the two goals can indeed be met within a single volume.

John C. Bunnell is convinced that books are more addictive than coffee, cigarettes, and Diet Coke combined, but he refuses to seek treatment. Correspondence regarding “The Role of Books” may be addressed to him at 6663 SW Beaverton-Hillsdale Hwy. #326, Portland, OR 97225-1403.
Damn.

Damn damn damn.

I expected a hero’s welcome, and I find her... I find that balor...

I find them both...

Damn damn damn.

Excuse me?

Forgive me for interrupting, but I must ask: Are you not the Zaxarus, hero of Malevus, the great zombie spy?

An arcanaloth. Loyal to neither side in the Blood War. Always making a deal with everyone. They are as slippery as a greased basilisk, and just as deadly.

Yes, I am that Zaxarus.

Not that it matters.
A battle plan. Nothing important.

This client would reward you well.

Sold, magic, renown—my client is powerful enough to grant ANY wish.

Ah, I have struck a nerve. Now what would a half-breed like you wish for?
I'd wish for Alam... no, for everyone to know my achievements, to know who I am. I want to be recognized for my deeds.

I want to be known as a hero.

I think that can be arranged.

A planar portal—here? Where does it lead?

To my client.

Can he grant my wish?

Yes. I want all the Abyss to know I am a hero. That I risk my lives for theirs.

When does your client get here?

Granting reputation and honor are as simple as children's toys for my client. Is that the deal you wish to make? Recognition—heroism—for the battle plans?
I am already HERE, little fiend!

The arcanaclath's client is an aasimon, a being of pure light. Goodness incarnate. My flesh crawls at the very touch of its radiance. Its pompous lawfulness ripples across my skin like acid.

THIS small being brings the plans?

He is like any other creature—he has his wants and desires. His mortal blood behooves him.

What ARE his desires?

I want the tanar'ri to respect me as a hero. I want to show I’m better than that sodding balor.

I want Alamanda to respect me. To love only me.

And in exchange, he will hand over the haukezu's plans for assaulting Malevolus.

DONE!
To select a topic, left click on its button. To receive help on a topic, right click on the topic text. For an explanation of the current screen, left click on the Wizard button.

Player Character
- Generate New Character
- Update Existing Character
- Enter Existing Character
- View Character Sheet

Books On Line
- Key Topics
- Player’s Handbook
- DUNGEON MASTER® Guide
- Monstrous Manual™
- Arms & Equipment Guide
- Tome of Magic
- Instructions

DM Toolkit
- Handout Generator
- Treasure Generator
- Monster Generator
- NPC Generator
- Encounter Generator
- Map Maker
- Dice Rolls
- Table Rolls

The Electronic Wizard
Most of you reading this have probably already guessed that working in TSR's Creative Division has certain perks, from a gamer's point of view.

One of the best is that we know all about upcoming AD&D® game products long before anyone else (because besides writing, editing, illustrating, and producing the products, we decide what they'll be in the first place).

Even better, we get to see what people outside TSR are doing with licensed products. That's been particularly exciting during the past year, when we've worked with Evermore Entertainment, Inc., on the upcoming AD&D CD-ROM Core Rules for Windows.

Before I get started describing what's on the CD-ROM, I want to stress right up front that the software I've seen and played with is still under development. There will be changes between the time of this writing and the time the product goes on sale (it premieres at the Gen Con Game Fair). Because of deadline differences between printed and electronic material (it takes longer to print this magazine than to make a CD), you'll probably find differences between the software I'm describing and what's on the demo disk in this issue. Some screens may look different and some functions may operate differently; the folks at Evermore Entertainment are working constantly to improve the look and performance of the program (and I do mean constantly; the last time we visited the EE offices, some of their artists had been at their desks for almost 24 hours and had only recently gone home to catch a few hours' sleep before returning to demonstrate their latest accomplishments.)

The best place to start looking at the CD-ROM is in the table of contents. It's divided into three sections: Player Character, Books On Line, and DM Toolkit. We'll discuss them in detail, but slightly out of order.

Books On Line

The heart of the CD is the complete text of the Player's Handbook, Dungeon Master® Guide, Monstrous Manual™ tome, Arms & Equipment Guide, and Tome of Magic. Every word from these five manuals is available in both rich text and word processor format.

In rich text format, the text can be read like a help file. All five books are completely cross-referenced and hyper-text linked both internally and to each other. If you're looking for information on a particular topic, you can find it by scanning the table of contents and clicking on the desired section, by entering the “key topic” search utility and typing the words you're searching for, or by scrolling through text until you come to the pages you want.

At the end of each sub-section of text is a list of cross-references to related material in all five of the books; click on a word, and you're there.

Assume, for example, that you're reading about elves in the Player's Handbook. At the end of that section you will find a string of related topics. By clicking on one of the key words, you can instantly send yourself to the elf entry in the Monstrous Manual tome, to a description of elven chain mail in the Arms & Equipment Guide, to the bonuses and penalties assigned to elven thieves, and numerous other topics that involve elves.

You can also click on highlighted words embedded in the articles and do the same thing. In the description of elf characters, for example, is a mention of their immunity to sleep and charm spells. By clicking on those words, you can jump instantly to the descriptions of the spells, and then back again to the elf character rules.

The books are also stored in a format compatible with the word processor program that comes packaged with every copy of Windows. If you don't like the way I edited the 2nd Edition handbooks, you can pull the text into the word processor and rewrite, revise, and reorganize to your heart's content. If you play with a house rule that lets a shield improve AC by three points instead of one, you can make those changes directly to Table 46 in the Player's Handbook, then store that file on disk or print out a copy for everyone in your campaign to insert into their PHBs. Or, you could build one file containing all the spells from the PHB and the Tome of Magic, reorganize them however you want, and then build a second file containing only the

Before using the demo disk, try to play it as an audio CD in your CD-ROM drive. If you hear sound, everything's fine. If you don't hear it, do not use the Wizard function in the demo (it'll lock up your system and make you reboot). The other features will still work normally.
The best part about all this is that the whole process is foolproof. At each step the computer displays every alternative and prompts you for a choice. You click on the option you want, the computer makes all the adjustments, and you’re on to the next step. The whole process, using every optional rule in the core handbooks, can be completed by even the most fastidious min/maxer in 10-15 minutes. That’s an impressive performance for a task that can take an experienced player up to an hour with dice and paper.

Better yet, there is no possibility of making a mistake. No optional rule can be forgotten or misinterpreted, no modifier can be written down wrong, no table can be misread. If you don’t like the way things are turning out, you can back up to a previous step and try again, or simply override the computer. (Even illegal combinations, like dwarf paladin/bards, can be requested; if your DM allows it, none dare call it cheating.)

If you have a character already, you can type it into the character database and get it printed out on the attractive, color character sheet. After each playing session, a few keystrokes update the electronic record so it is ready for the next game.

There’s also a gallery of head-and-shoulders character portraits. You can pick the one that looks most like your PC and plug it into the character sheet. Because they are bitmap files, you can load a portrait that’s close, but not quite right, into Paint or Paintbrush (you have one of them if you’re running Windows) and modify it to look exactly the way you want. (This assumes you have enough artistic talent to do that sort of bitmap editing, but anyone who paints miniatures should have no problem.)

DM Toolkit

This portion of the CD-ROM is a collection of utilities that are invaluable to any Dungeon Master. A list of the options under DM Toolkit includes: Handout Generator, Treasure Generator, Monster Generator, NPC Generator, Encounter Generator, Map Maker, Dice Rolls, and Table Rolls.

The handout generator is a collection of preset word processor page formats for making attractive printouts to hand to the players. Lend any document an air of authenticity, or simply dress it up, for making attractive printouts to hand to the players. Lend any document an air of authenticity, or simply dress it up, or simply override the computer. (Even illegal combinations, like dwarf paladin/bards, can be requested; if your DM allows it, none dare call it cheating.)

If you have a character already, you can type it into the character database and get it printed out on the attractive, color character sheet. After each playing session, a few keystrokes update the electronic record so it is ready for the next game.

There’s also a gallery of head-and-shoulders character portraits. You can pick the one that looks most like your PC and plug it into the character sheet. Because they are bitmap files, you can load a portrait that’s close, but not quite right, into Paint or Paintbrush (you have one of them if you’re running Windows) and modify it to look exactly the way you want. (This assumes you have enough artistic talent to do that sort of bitmap editing, but anyone who paints miniatures should have no problem.)

Player Character

As impressive as the on-line manuals are, character manipulation is where the program really starts to shine. The Player Character options on the main menu include Generate New Character, Update Existing Character, Enter Existing Character, and View Character Sheet.

Some of those are self-explanatory, but the character generation utility is of special interest. This is, by far, the fastest, easiest way to create an AD&D character that has ever been put together.

The process starts by selecting which dice-rolling method you want to use to generate the six ability scores. When the scores come up, you can alter them if you want (for the cheaters out there). The screen highlights every race and class combination that is open to a character with those ability scores. Click on the one you want and the ability scores are modified automatically, if necessary.

From there, you go on to select priest or wizard spells (with the computer handling all the dice rolls for learning and guaranteeing that you don’t select too few or too many), assign discretionary points to thieving skills, select an alignment, roll hit points, and select weapon and nonweapon proficiencies. Not sure what a particular nonweapon proficiency lets you do? Click on it and get a description.

The best part about all this is that the whole process is foolproof. At each step the computer displays every alternative and prompts you for a choice. You click on the option you want, the computer makes all the adjustments, and you’re on to the next step. The whole process, using every optional rule in the core handbooks, can be completed by even the most fastidious min/maxer in 10-15 minutes. That’s an impressive performance for a task that can take an experienced player up to an hour with dice and paper.

Better yet, there is no possibility of making a mistake. No optional rule can be forgotten or misinterpreted, no modifier can be written down wrong, no table can be misread. If you don’t like the way things are turning out, you can back up to a previous step and try again, or simply override the computer. (Even illegal combinations, like dwarf paladin/bards, can be requested; if your DM allows it, none dare call it cheating.)

If you have a character already, you can type it into the character database and get it printed out on the attractive, color character sheet. After each playing session, a few keystrokes update the electronic record so it is ready for the next game.

There’s also a gallery of head-and-shoulders character portraits. You can pick the one that looks most like your PC and plug it into the character sheet. Because they are bitmap files, you can load a portrait that’s close, but not quite right, into Paint or Paintbrush (you have one of them if you’re running Windows) and modify it to look exactly the way you want. (This assumes you have enough artistic talent to do that sort of bitmap editing, but anyone who paints miniatures should have no problem.)

NPC Generator

There’s also a gallery of head-and-shoulders character portraits. You can pick the one that looks most like your PC and plug it into the character sheet. Because they are bitmap files, you can load a portrait that’s close, but not quite right, into Paint or Paintbrush (you have one of them if you’re running Windows) and modify it to look exactly the way you want. (This assumes you have enough artistic talent to do that sort of bitmap editing, but anyone who paints miniatures should have no problem.)
the maps. They appear as a capital letter; click on that letter and a window opens with the description of your encounter. All the notes for your dungeon rooms, city buildings, and wilderness areas can be linked directly to the maps so there’s no paper shuffling to find out what’s where. With the monsters, NPCs, encounters, and treasures generated earlier plugged into your maps for instant reference, you’re switched on and ready to rock.

Obviously, this system works best if the computer is sitting on your gaming table. But even if you can’t bring the computer to the game, you can print everything out and have it in nice, neat, well-ordered, legible pages. And it’s easy to update without erasing or scribbling notes in the margins. (Have you ever tried updating a hand-drawn color map after gnoll raiders pass through the frontier and burn a dozen villages to the ground? If so, you’ll really appreciate this map maker.)

One last feature of the mapping utility has to be mentioned: 3-D. After drawing a dungeon map in the standard top-down view, the computer will convert it to a first-person perspective, you-are-there, 3-D view that you can walk through (electronically, of course). Besides just being a lot of fun to play with, this is a great way to improve your dungeon designing skill. You can see exactly what the characters would see from any position in the dungeon.

Remember Tomb of Horrors? Or Labyrinth of Madness? Those adventures came with illustration booklets so the DM could show players what they saw when they entered a room. You can create your own illustrated dungeon adventures with this 3-D mapping tool by printing out the screen images you want the players to see.

The function of the die rolls and table rolls tools is pretty obvious, so I won’t belabor it here.

The Wizard
All of this is wrapped up with two help features: the wizard and the right mouse button. As in most Windows programs, right-clicking on an icon or screen button brings up a brief description of what it does. That description is also interactive, in that you can use it to jump to the topics mentioned in the help window. Clicking the wizard button brings in — you guessed it — the wizard, who presents a brief, animated tutorial on all the functions that can be accessed from the current page.

Putting it all together
What excites me the most about this project is that the whole is much more than the sum of its parts. The tools and the text can be combined in so many ways, to accomplish so many different tasks, that I haven’t even begun to scratch the surface in this article. It’s clear to me that the work going on at Evermore Entertainment is opening up a whole new area of role-playing accessories. Try the demo disk, and I think you’ll agree.

And one last note: I’d like to acknowledge the work of puppetmaster Bill Connors, whose flawless master plan and behind-the-scenes manipulation brought us this fine product. His unwitting tools have performed beautifully.

By age 24, Steve Winter was mired in an endless spiral of easy women, fast cars, cheap liquor, and dirty money. Then in 1981 he took a job with TSR inc. and has never looked back. Besides a full-time job overseeing the AD&D® game, he keeps himself busy with a wife, two sons, a 90-year-old house, a 47-year-old Chevrolet truck, and a six-month-old computer.
Tales of the Fifth Age

Measure of the Home Guard

by J. Robert King

Artwork by Terry Dykstra

9 Sc:
With the departure of the gods and the death of Lord Knight Gunhtar Uth Wistan, the Knights of Solamnia faced dissolution. In the ninth year after the Second Cataclysm, however, Gunhtar’s successor gathered the Knights for a High Council at Whitestone Glade. There, he revealed for the first time the foundations of a new Measure...

— From the Chronicles of Nathal, compiled in 31 Sc
I knew it was a big mistake, but at least it was my mistake. At least, and at last, my own big mistake.

I’d been living out dad’s mistakes all my life: stuck on his farm in Markennan, slopping pigs he bought and never tended, fixing the house he let fall to pieces, tilling the rocky ground that the only one good spot of which was the bottom land where he was buried, tilling the rocky ground that the only one good spot of which was the bottom land where he was buried, bringing in turnips and beans not fit for pigs but fit for me until one of the pigs was big enough to eat, loading the wagon with slop for the pigs and then actually drawing it myself since dad, when he died, took with him the only one worthwhile thing I ever owned, which was my mule, Vinas Solamnus.

Sure I’d been building muscles, but for what?
And all the while, there was evil at large in the world. Even in Gunthar, itself. Not in Markennan, of course. Markennan was too boring to attract anything evil. But in Garret and Khas, for sure there was evil. I met a fellow from Khas who once even saw a draconian. There sure enough was evil out there needing a bashing and me in here with muscles all itching to bash something and never the twain shall meet.

Well, this evening they were going to meet. That’s what I was going off to do with this first big mistake of mine.

I penned up the pigs and left a lantern going in my room with my work coat kind of slumped up on my chair by the window so Charla wouldn’t come by and let the pigs out and try to ride them. Then I went out the back door and off toward Whitestone Glade.

You see, Jarrad Borfson, was hiking out to join the Knights of Solamnia.

I know, I know, that’s not the way you join the Knights. You don’t just show up at a meeting of the Grand Circle and say to them, “I, Jarrad Borfson, hiked out here to join you.” But I told myself that any Knight who loved justice and learned that a man with my frame and my mind and my love of justice was farming pigs — such a Knight would have to save me. I no more belonged on the farm than a draconian belonged in Khas.

Of course, I half expected to be run out of there. That’s why I didn’t sell the pigs and farm before going. On the other hand, if the Knights turned me down, I’d run the pigs off and burn the farm, just on principle. Still, I wanted to get into the Knighthood, and there were a couple things I could do to help my chances.

One was to prove I was brave, which meant bringing with me some token of my fighting skill. The problem was, I’d been so distracted by the pigs and piling up my coat against the window, I’d forgotten to bring anything like that — not that I had anything to bring. I’d spent two years in a regular war against raccoons, once even chasing one over the barn roof until I fell through, but I didn’t have even a cap or a tail to prove any of it. Besides, I didn’t figure raccoons counted as forces of darkness, though they should.

Maybe just showing up at a Knights’ Council would be proof enough of my courage, I thought suddenly. Or my stupidity.

The other thing I could do to help my case was, once I got there, to get one of them to sponsor me. That would mean squire work. Spit-shining boots and spear-bearing and saying things like “Good show, Sir Knight!” I wouldn’t mind that kind of work. It wasn’t just a step above pig farming; it was a whole staircase.

I’d gone off like a half-wit, true enough, with only my tunic, breeches, boots, a few daggers, and a mangy deerskin cape. But at least I’d gone off, which until then I’d not done at all. As I said, I’d been too long living out dad’s mistakes (what he’d called his “dreams,” which amounted to things he thought he’d be good at but wasn’t), and figured it was time to make some mistakes of my own.

It was probably just as well I left my brain behind: evil was waiting up the road, ready to bash in what I hadn’t even brought along.

It was coming on to dusk when I wended transverse up a long-sloped swale full of pixie grass and little dots of white and pink beggarweed. I looked up and saw, at the upper edge of a fenced pasture atop the rise, two fellows standing and talking.
Now, I knew right off these weren’t farmers. Farmers don’t stand to talk. They sit on their heels because what is there to talk about but the ground and what’s growing on it? Neither do they sit on a fence, like the one was doing now, because nobody who has had to split his own rails and notch them and post them is going to sit on them and break them down, like just happened to the one fellow.

While this one was getting up and the other was laughing into his hand, I got closer and could see what they wore. Armor, black and scarred as lard-boiling kettles, and capes equally black, and above all this, faces whiter than mushrooms, like these fellows lived underground. City folk. They had swords, too, which I didn’t. I carried only a stout stick that I’d picked up because it was lying on dad’s grave, and which I’d kept because it had the right weight and swing for a walking stick. I didn’t know what city folk were doing out here breaking down somebody’s fence, but I didn’t have time to ask.

I didn’t need to. "Hey, Farmer," one of them shouted to me. Again, it showed they weren’t.
Farmers don't call each other farmer, any more than human beings say, "Hey, Human Being." Anyway, he called out, "Hey, Farmer, where do you think you're going?"

"I'm going to Whitestone Glade, to join the Knights," I said as I got near.

They, the two — the one talking had black hair and a mean little goatee like on Jesse's prize ram, Puggins, and the other one was as blond as the dust he was still trying to knock out of his pants — they stepped into my way.

The dark-haired one complained, "Not another one. Go back home, Farmer." He sniffed, his nose flaring like he was more used to coal smoke than manure-smell. "The Knights don't need any pigs, Farmer."

I stopped and stood, my head back on my neck like a rooster ready to pluck out an eye. "Yeah? Well, how do you know? Are you a Knight?"

They thought that was pretty funny, and then Puggins said, "We are. But Knights of a different color."

Knights of Takhisis, I realized. See? Evil at large, and not five miles from my barned-up pigs.

I lifted the staff the way I saw a prophet do on a woodcut, and I said, "Out of my way."

Next thing I knew, I was looking up at them from the ground, and they were laughing again. Two on one's never fair, of course, but these two — a yearling pig could outweigh either of them. Besides, I'd so convinced myself of my strength, wrestling hay bales and all, that I was surprised to find that villains wrestled back.

I stood up. They let me. This time I raised the stick not like a holy staff but like a club. "Let me by."

More of that jackanapes laughter, like dogs wheezing with croup. Puggins sneered, "We haven't let anybody else by yet. Why should you be the first?"

I walloped him. Just like that. As he went down, I couldn't help thinking how his head looked like a black-haired raccoon beneath my walking stick.

It seemed like an all right thing to do. I go to a temple of Kiri-Jolith where if you talk during the service, they club you in the head. Now, if a priest could do that in a temple, and to well-meaning people, why couldn't I do it in a field and to an evil-meaning Knight of darkness? Besides, it wouldn't hurt too bad. I knew from experience how this fellow felt as he staggered around and clutched his head. You see, I used to talk sometimes in the temple.

No sooner than I pulled my stick back, the other one had his sword out and was coming for me.

His sword was sharp. It cut the last four inches from my stick. I thought swords weren't supposed to be sharp but be like plowshares, where a sharp edge would notch too easy. I've since decided these particular Knights were in with Takhisis more for the fashion of the armor than for real battle, and their swords were ornaments that hadn't been used against anybody before me. But, at the time, this guy seemed a true servant of evil, and the four inches could have come off me rather than the stick.

He took a jab at me and caught me in the rib.

Yeah, it was a sharp sword. I didn't even feel it, except the wet heat like sweat rolling down my gut. He sneered to see it.

I couldn't figure why he'd done that except sheer meanness and stupidity. Sneering at a guy that's three times your weight just after you stab him is like kicking a bear and then taunting it. I suddenly wasn't hurt or scared or anything, just plain mad.

"Raauurr!" I said. I'd always thought my first battle cry would have more poetry, naming the honor of my dead dad or maybe the love of Clarabella Gabriella Brendabules, but this was all I got out.

Still, the stick whacked him good on the head, whacked him good enough that it — the stick — broke in two and sent him stumbling around like Puggins.

Only Puggins wasn't stumbling anymore. He was up and ready to fight. For that matter, I no longer had a stout walking stick, but a stout crawling stick. My boot helped Blondy to the ground, but not before I snatched away his too-sharp sword and whirled on Puggins.

He looked disappointed that my stick'd turned into a sword. Still, there was wounded pride in his eyes, and the part in his hair crossed a rising goose egg. He swung at me. I knocked his sword back with a big roundhouse clang. It nearly spun him around. I didn't even pretend to know what I was doing with a sword. I just put up my fists like this was a brawl, and when I'd take a punch at him, I'd make sure the blade got between us.

It must've looked queer, a fellow with a sword fighting like he had only knuckles. Puggins might've laughed if I hadn't just banged him in the shoulder. From underneath a metal plate, blood came smooth and even.

Still, he wouldn't stop. Puggins wanted a piece of me, and he came on like he was going to knock me down with an elbow. Now, even a dumb goat won't ram an oak tree: goats don't like headaches anymore than anybody else. Well, this goat got one, quick, his head meeting my free fist.

His sword dug down into my punching arm.

I felt that one. I slugged him another one in the head, and he staggered back, dragging the sword through the wound in my arm. Enough was enough. I pulled my arm away and stabbed the Knight in the leg. He went down after that, and I could tell he’d not be walking again anytime soon.

I looked at his friend, who lay unconscious on a rock nearby. There was a heck of a lot of blood on that rock, but that’s the way it is with head wounds. It didn’t mean anything.

I wasn’t in great shape, myself. The cut on my arm was deep and bled evenly, though I could move my fingers, and the one over my rib stung with sweat. Still, I could walk, and bandage myself while I did. I’d get to Whitestone Glade looking all the better to wear... and carrying the sword of a Knight of Takhisis. That ought to be worth something.

I turned, and continued on up the path, which ran for a little bit along the pasture fence before it cut into some old-growth forest.

“Hey, Farmer!” shouted Puggins as I walked away. “You’re just going to leave us here to die?”

“I’m going to Whitestone Glade. I’m going to join the Knights of Solamnia,” I answered, wrapping my arm and refusing to look back.

“It’s dishonorable to leave a foe to die,” Puggins pointed out.

This gave me pause for a moment, until I heard the nearby buzz and distant crack of a crossbow bolt whiz past my ear and strike a tree ahead of me.

I glanced at Puggins, who struggled to reload the hand-crossbow he bore. I shook my head. He’d just found his target. (This was the way you’d start trying to stop a belch. (This was the way you’d start sniff, and say, “Where’re you off to, Farmer?”

He might not have heard the last, because I was already in the woods. It didn’t matter. They’d tried to stop me from going to join the Solamnic Knights, even tried to kill me, and then they’d ended up lying in a bed of their own blood — which they’d made in spite of me and which they’d asked me to help them out of only to shoot at me when I considered.

Evil seems, sometimes, just too stupid to be really harmful.

It was still miles and miles to Whitestone Glade.
I’d not be there until three hours after sundown, and by then the blood-soaked rag around my arm would be cold with night.

I walked. It got dark.

Around me was an old-growth forest from the time of Vinas Solamnus, which held in it a few newer glades, where fires had once reduced everything to primeval blackness, or where saplings grew up through ruined rafters and birds nested in chimneys of old, abandoned farms. I started wondering if this was what would become of dad’s place, wrested away from nature only to be plowed and plied awhile in futility and then given back to nature, again, like some broken and worthless tool.

It was funny: trees that had taken root before even the Third Dragon War stood beside plots of ground that wouldn’t grow a damned stalk of corn.

It made me think of the difference between Vinas Solamnus and me: His smallest actions changed the whole world for all of time, and yet I can’t even fix the barn latch and make it stay fixed.

I almost went back, then and there. I’d never make a Knight. I wasn’t noble. I wasn’t anything at all. A wise man once said that cats look down on you, and dogs look up to you, but a pig’ll look you in the eye and see his equal. That was me — Jarrad Borfson, first among equals when tending pigs.

In fact, I would have turned back but for that sword in my hand. It had been the tool of evil, and now, here it was, in a muscular grip pledged at least to pigs and perhaps even to good. That silly, sharpened, ornamental sword told me I must go on. Let Charla ride my pigs. I must go on.

The very next voice of intuition issued a countermand — “Halt!” In actual fact, it wasn’t a voice of intuition, but an honest-to-goodness voice. “I said ‘Halt,’ Farmer!”

This wouldn’t be another farmer, either. I halted but still held that sword up from my hand, ready to punch.

From out of a big yew bush came a soldier, his armor all scarred and polished gray metal, and his face serious with one of those long drooping knight mustaches. He looked me up and down, gave one sniff, and said, “Where’re you off to, Farmer?”

I found myself drooping for a moment to one knee, my head dipping toward my chest like I was trying to stop a belch. (This was the way you’d start off when talking to Kiri-Jolith in the temple.) “I, Jarrad Borfson, am here to become a Knight of Solamnia.”

The man sheathed the sword he had, crossed his arms on his breastplate, and looked down at me. That is, he looked down until I stood up, and then he had to crane his neck back to see me. “You know, Farmer, you don’t just show up at a meeting of the Grand Circle and — ”

“I know, Sir Knight. Well said,” I replied, having expected this and rehearsed it a few times on my way in. “But I was just so sick of the pigs, and there’s evil at large — in Gunthar, even, not twelve miles back —”

His eye on me glared as if he were picking out a soldier for latrine-cleaning duty. “You’re of the faithful of Kiri-Jolith?”

"Why, yes, Sir Knight," I said with pride. He must have guessed it from the way I'd knelt and dipped my head. I suddenly felt ashamed of my pride. "The pigs keep me pretty busy, and sometimes I miss services. I guess I've not been completely faithful in about five years."

He smiled. "That's all right. Kiri-Jolith's not been faithful since the Second Cataclysm." As to what he meant by that, I couldn't've told. "When you say there's evil in Gunthar, you're right about that."

"I know it," I said. I gestured over my shoulder with the sword, which I realized was a mistake when two more Knights came out of two more yew bushes and pointed crossbows at me. I smiled and dropped the sword to the ground. "I ran into two Knights of Takhisis who wanted to keep me from coming here. This — I gestured at the ground "— is the sword of one of them."

The three Knights traded nervous looks, and then the lead one unfolded his arms and picked up my sword. "Knights of Takhisis, aye? We'll have to take this sword — and your other weapons — but then you can come in. I'm sure the new Grand Master would like a talk with you."

I nodded in stunned-dumb excitement, and then quickly flicked all my weapons onto the ground, including my boot dagger and the little knife that I use only to clean my teeth. Again, they looked fearful each time my hand darted into my clothes, but I was so fast at flinging the weapons away that I was done before anybody could shoot me. They checked for other weapons, but I'd gotten them all. The first Knight that had spoken said to his friends, "I'll escort him to the glade."

The other two nodded, and rustled their way back into the bushes. My guide and I started forward, into a birch forest.

I noticed now that what we walked was not just ground, but a kind of secret path, like a deer trail, except made by the feet of iron-shod Knights. However he was shod, the man in front of me moved with the silence of a deer. The narrow black channel we followed wound like a little runoff creek among the indigo leaves of the boarscrub, and even though I walked as quietly as possible, the scrub prattled around my ankles. Soon, a breeze came among the gray birch boles, which swayed in the darkness around us. The small, eye-shaped leaves overhead winked down.

The ground rose. The forest was open between the slender trunks, and in the darkness I saw old, old boulders stranded, half-sunk, in the hillside. Now leaves brushed our shoulders, and the land opened up so that, in daylight, it would have shimmered and glowed. We climbed the trail. It switched back patiently, and up farther. Even though I couldn't see it for the leaves and the slivered moonlight, I could feel the whole vast world dropping slowly down beneath me as we climbed the rise. It is what a tree must feel when it goes from seed to sapling to sentinel, goes from being a tiny idea under everything to being a big actuality above everything.

We rounded another weathered wedge of stone, rooted in the ground like a worn-out giant-tooth, and then there it was — Whitestone Glade. The ground dipped just before us, between two boulders, which stood sentry at the mouth of the glade as though to keep the trees back. Beyond the stones was a great flat clearing that held the Whitestone.

Megalith is a word I once heard, and it fit for that thing. The Whitestone looked like a chunk of Solinari fallen to Krynn, or perhaps the whole moon itself. The stone was taller than the trees and so big that it sent moon shadows down over half the glade. It sat on a tapestry of grass that was mottled with rain and lantern light — and the figures of Knights.

There must have been a hundred Knights there, more than I thought there to be in all Ansalon, let alone Gunthar. Some sat on stone-hewn benches in rows before the megalith, others squatted or knelt like Abanasinian savages in the open spaces to either side, and others still stood at the back of the glade. Wherever they were, the Knights were as hushed and attentively leaning as the stone itself.

My eyes returned to the Whitestone. The boulder looked old enough to have seen the creation of the gods. It was at this stone that Vinas Solamnus had had his revelation, and beside this stone that the Grand Circle of Knights had met, in dire times like these, since the Cataclysm.

Right now, to either side of the stone, were seated a regal company of Knights, the heads of each order and other such dignitaries. In front of the stone stood a black-haired, wise-looking Knight, his silvery armor draped with a velvet stole that was embroidered with the symbols of a three-thousand-year-old order. This was, I figured, the new Grand Master, Sir Ehrling, Knight of the Rose. He was addressing the Knights, his voice commanding and robust, his muscular hands raised as though he spoke to the black skies above.

I realized I was on my knees. I'd not meant to kneel, but sometimes your body knows better what you should do than you do. The soldier with me was not impressed. He helped me up and patted my back. "It's all right. Perhaps you should sit until the ceremony is done."
I remember intending to nod, but realized I was already sitting beside one of those sentry stones. The Knight stood there next to me.

I was stupefied — a pig in heaven. That's how I felt — dumb, dirty, unworthy. I thought again of my pigs, crowded into the barn back home, and I wondered whatever idiot impulse had sent me hiking out here as if these Knights would ever have me. You can wash a pig and shave him down and put him in armor, but still, what you've got is a pig.

I bit my lip and cursed myself. Here I was, at a meeting of the Grand Circle, and hadn't even enough sense to listen to what the Knight at the center of it all was saying. I cursed even my cursing, for having stolen from me the last few words he'd spoken. Then I finally settled down enough to listen:

"...Three decades past, a work was begun by Lord Gunthar and, I daresay, by Paladine and Kiri-Jolith and Habbakuk: To revise and reform the Measure of the Knighthood. I worked closely with Lord Gunthar in this endeavor. How ironic that the Second Cataclysm has accomplished a more radical revision of the very the world in less time than we could dutifully and carefully revise our own Measure! Our beloved Lord Knight Gunthar labored in both transformations — the rebirth of the world and the revision of the Measure. These monumental labors bore him to the grave.

"Lord Gunthar is dead. The gods are gone. The great library of Palanthas has been torn away. The old Measure has been parsed and redacted and distilled into nonsense. It is as though the wisdom of the past ages cannot be the wisdom of today.

"In this new age, then, how do we measure ourselves? In an age when elves and ogres fight side-by-side against the chaos armies of the dead, what measure remains? When Knights of Solamnia and Knights of Takhisis are buried like comrades at the Last Heroes' Tomb, what measure remains?"

I trembled at that. Knights of Takhisis buried beside Knights of Solamnia? Had I done a terrible thing on the road to reach this place? Had right and wrong, themselves, shifted around me?

"These are strange times, and all the world has changed. Can we measure our honor by an oblivious and unchanged code?

"Est Sularus oth Mithas — My Honor is My Life. For ages, honor has been taken to mean cleaving to that which is right and good. Honor meant bravely and wisely championing justice in the lives of others, and practicing temperance in our own living. Honor meant battling evil in all its thousand manifestations. A Knight's life, quite simply, was the honest practice of these virtues and the valorous warfare against evil.

"But now, the gods of good and evil are gone. Anyone who fights for Paladine or Kiri-Jolith or Habakkuk fights for nothing, at all.

I was not the only one who groaned in amazed dismay at that pronouncement. (I had heard idlers in the granary speak of the departure of the gods but thought they knew less about gods than they did about grains.) It occurred to me that this disappearance must have been what the guard meant about Kiri-Jolith's unfaithfulness.

The black-haired man was not done. "So too, anyone who fights for Takhisis or Sargonnas or Chemosh fights for nothing, at all.

"And, we have seen it so. Chromatic dragons have fought beside metallic dragons. We have done it, ourselves. Solamnic Knights have fought side-by-side and arm-in-arm with followers of Takhisis. Mortals, the living — whomever they worshiped — have, across our globe, banded together to fight the immortal dead — frost-wights, shadow-wights, demon warriors, and the forces of Chaos. All living creatures have found themselves in a battle in which the division of good and evil is too minute to matter, in which the foe is absolute dissolution — immortal and eternal death. Death for every creature, and for all. This is our true foe, now."

I was feeling sick right about then.

From the moment I'd fallen to my knees at the entrance to the glade, I'd felt my soul changing in me. First came those tormented despairing moments of waking when you realize just how long you've slept in a dead futile pointlessness of complaining and failing. Then, my soul came awake fully. My eyes were open at last, and my ears heard truth instead of the tolling carillon of dream. I could only breathe. I listened to the beautiful, golden sound of his voice — the voice of the Grand Master. It was breath in me.

My soul rose up on listening like a bird on warm spring air. I saw myself from above, this big, slumped-over pig farmer, a dirty and desperate brute hoping for Knighthood. I soared higher and saw the whole midnight glade, glowing with lanterns and moonlight, yes, but with souls more than anything else. We were all lights, all brilliant fires, even me, who'd been until that moment only dead dull coal. Higher still, and I saw the glowing hope of each of the sentries' souls, and the animals in that wood, and even the trees themselves. The whole place was luminous.

It was as if, before, we'd had a sun above to light the darkness, but now there was no sun, only us. So we were beginning to shine, we ourselves, and all our world around us.

The higher my soul flew on those words of his,
the more I saw: the farms around, lit with the shimmer-glow of nodding heads of wheat and the bright blaze of cows and chickens and pigs — pigs, like my own. Pigs. Living things. I knew then that when I looked into the eye of a pig and saw my equal, it was not because I was lowly or they exalted, but because we were both alive. We both stood against darkness and dissolution.

Up farther, and the sky above was black and empty, but the ground below was crowded with stars, with souls standing against the night. I saw, in time, all of Gunthar — the bright galaxy of my pigs, still in the barn, though Charla even now stalked up to the latch.

And then I saw the Ergoths, and Solamnia and all of Ansalon, all of Krynn. It was a heady height for any soul, especially that of a pig farmer.

Suddenly, though, I fell. It was as though the wind had quit my soul's wings, and I dropped like a pig from the sky. I guess that's just what had happened, because the Grand Master had reached the point in his talk where he was saying evil and good didn't matter anymore, and what we fought for was just plain life, just life pure and simple. No longer could I soar.

And, damned if I didn't come to ground in the worst possible place, the place next to that broken-down fence where lay those two Knights of Takhisis I'd bashed and left bleeding, dying. I realized just then that's what they were off there doing — dying!

And me, thinking I could be a Knight of Solamnia, fighting evil instead of fighting death. It was the sort of thing to shame a man more deeply than even being a pig farmer — than even being a bad pig farmer.

"I've got to go," I told the fellow beside me, who'd helped me sit, though I wasn't sitting any longer. He tried to help me sit again, but this time it was like he wasn't even there. I turned and plowed my way out between those two big stones. The fellow must've gotten scraped off in there somewhere, and I started running.

The trail wasn't very plain to me, especially since my eyes were used to the lanterns, but I knew which way I wanted to go and bulled along that direction. Maybe I was still partly seeing with my soul, because I could make out the thin gray ash boles all around me, and I ran among them like a pig fleeing the slaughter chute.

"I've got to go," I told myself as I ran, and then told it, too, to the guards standing there on duty. They'd been watching the trail the other way, and nearly jumped from their armor to hear a bull moose charging them from behind. Maybe that's why they didn't shoot me, but just let me run past. "I've got to go."

I ran and ran. I fell down a lot. It was different running back on that dark track than it had been hiking up during the day and dusk. I was descending, from the highlands down to the coastal plains, and it was like one long irregular black staircase. My feet often caught short and jolted on nothing and let me plunge forward enough times I figured my brain'd be jarred near uselessness by the time I'd get there.

But I'd get there. I had to. It wasn't just a matter of honor. It was a matter of life and death.

I couldn't've said who was more hurt, the Knights of Takhisis or me, by the time I got there. Rips all over my tunic and jerkin, cold knees from mud and blood both, wounded arm, scratched face and throbbing bruises, breath that tore into and out of me like from a forge bellows. But I'd made it. Time to see if they would.

Puggins was cold, though still breathing pretty good. He'd dragged himself about a stone's throw away, and I smelled blood in the dewy grass. I figured he'd been trying to crawl over a short hedge row, but it'd defeated him as surely as I had. I picked him up — heavier than he'd looked, all in black — slung him over my shoulder, and hauled him to his buddy's side. There I put him down and turned to check the other.

Blondy wasn't quite as good. He'd not moved at all from the bloody rock that'd pillowed him when he went down, and now the rock was dry and crusted. I felt for breath and found none. There was only a faint drub-drub going on in his chest.

I sat back on my heels. He'd be gone soon, and nothing short of a paladin could save him now. I was no paladin.

I'd killed him, sure. I'd killed him with less thought than even killing a pig, because then at least you try to make it quick and painless. Of course, I don't know if a man should ever die quick and painless. Its too big a thing — to die. Death shouldn't be inconspicuous.

A little rattle from behind me made me think that though I'd killed one, I needn't have killed two. I turned around and started checking the man again, feeling for spots that were wet with warm blood, and staunching them first. My filthy, bloody tunic would not make the best bandage material, except that it was already in ready-made strips. I tried to use just clean, dry cloth, but when there weren't any left and there was more blood, I went ahead. I guess those mingled cloths made us, on some level, blood brothers.

I was near done, hunched shirtless over him, when the dawn approached. Dew dotted the dry blood on my shoulders.

Before the celestial sun arose in the east, there came, tiny and manifold, a string of terrestrial suns moving through the glades and grasslands beneath the gloaming. Lanterns.

I didn’t watch them come, the mounted Knights of Solamnia. It would’ve been a glorious sight to see, sure, the kind of thing that yesterday I’d’ve sold the whole farm just to see, but I wasn’t feeling too glorious.

Dawn was showing up my butcher’s work. It hadn’t looked so bad when I had left them here. It had felt even justified, even ironically fitting, that the waylayers had been waylaid and the evil-hearted Knights’d been undone by a good-hearted pig farmer.

This morning, though, it was just a sickening shame of blood-ruined grass, lips cracked and brown-specked, arms clenched in tight coma against the cold, fists knotted as though if they let go of the thin air they held, body and soul and all would slide away into the netherworld. It all was my work, my butchery, and I was ashamed of it.

So, I kept working until the gray horse hooves of the lead rider wuffed to a stop in the dust ahead of me. Other hooves, behind, made their last, reluctant impacts and fell silent in the humming dawn. I looked up, past the steed’s gray-haired fetlocks, deep-sculpted chestnuts, shoulders, neck, and dappled cheeks to its eyes. The horse returned my blinking stare, neither approving nor reproving.

Above the old, wise equine face hovered the black-haired visage of the Solamnic Grand Master. His face was robust and red, his eyes like swords standing out of his skull.

He spoke. It was the same forceful voice from the glade, only quiet. “Are these the Knights of Takhisis you reported?”

Without looking away, I said, “Yes.”

He nodded grimly. “How do they fare?”

“I didn’t mean to kill either of them,” I blurted. “I just wanted past, so I could go to the gathering and join the Knighthood, not that that’s how you do it or that I ended up even trying, because when I heard your speech about there was no longer good and evil but only life and death, I realized that hitting them so hard with my stick had been just the wrong thing to do to become a Knight, so I rushed back here and found them — ”

“How do they fare?” he asked again, with that same level voice.

“Not good,” I confessed. “This one’s not bleeding anymore, but he won’t wake up and won’t get warmer, even with my fur cape over him. The other one’s... well — I think he was gone before I even got back. If there’s anything you can do to... I just... if, if they lived...”

The man didn’t move a muscle, not even his lips, when he asked, “And how do you fare?”

I was kind of surprised by that. I figured there wasn’t any use worrying about me at the moment. “I’m all right.”

He shifted in his saddle. “You left an easy trail to follow, bloodier and bloodier as it went.”

“I just wanted to get back here and put to rights what I did wrong.”

He swung from the saddle and stepped down.

“Son, war is war. After every treaty is signed, there are casualties. The word is slow in reaching all the battlefields. You did not know the war was over.”

I looked up at him and implored. “Please, if you can do anything for — “ My words stopped, because he’d touched his hands to me, and all of a sudden I was warm and whole again. I looked down at myself, and not a scratch remained on me.

The sun rose just then and struck me and shone warm and welcoming on my new flesh, like I was a baby born at dawn. All nervy and weepy, I dropped to my knees in front of the man. “Thank you. Thank you.”

There were others, now, those beautiful silver Knights stepping regally over the crimson grass and laying hands on the other two. Like breath blown over coals, their touch awakened the dying fires in the men, and they, soon, were whole again, blinking into wakefulness.

“Thank you,” I repeated. “Thank you.”

The Grand Master asked me my name, and I told it to him. Then, he said, “Jarrad Borfson, you’ve shown yourself worthy of the Knighthood, whether old or new. You have fought first evil, and now death. I will find, among the Crown Knights, a warrior in need of a worthy squire.”

I looked tearily up at him. The Grand Master himself, addressing me, accepting me into the Knighthood... No other man in Markennan had been so honored, not for a thousand years, and certainly no pig farmer.

Pig farmer. I suddenly thought of my pigs and how I should be letting them out into the sunlight and how they’d be huddled up there in the dark, smelling the dawn through the loose slats in the barn but not out in it.

I still can’t believe my answer, can’t imagine where that rebel impulse came from, but I said it, and have always afterward been glad I did.

“No, Sir Knight. Thanks, all the same, but I won’t need such arrangements. I’m going back to my farm and my pigs,” I heard myself saying.
He only looked at me, his eyes piercing. I went on. “See, I had a kind of a vision while you were talking, a vision about souls and life and death, and I think I've been fighting the good fight all along, there on my farm. That place is my life, see? I didn’t even know it until you were talking about the new Measure. It is my honor and my life, that farm.

“Did I tell you my dad’s buried there? He is, and on the best piece of land. I should make a garden around his grave — flowers and such. He was always a dreamer, but just couldn’t make things work. That was my job, and damn it if I don’t want to go right on back there to that place and make it work.

“I know it sounds stupid for a man to give up glory and battle for pigs and peas, but I guess they’re just in my blood.”

The Grand Master looked a little wistful at that. “It doesn’t sound stupid at all. I wish I’d thought of it.”

Another Knight came up, and he had the two Knights of Takhisis in shackles. “What do we do with these, Sir?”

“I’d like to have a talk with them. They seem to be under the misguided impression that we are foes. They also seem to think they can bully prospective knights away from the orders. We’ve much to talk about.” His eyes grew keen, and his face reddened as though he would savor the coming exchange. “If they listen, I’ll let them go. There’s precious little harm they can do, hereabouts.”

Then the Grand Master looked at me one last time before getting up on that wise old steed of his. He said, “The likes of such dark knights won’t be causing any more trouble around here, not if they’ve taken the true measure of the home guard.”

J. Robert King is a pudgy fellow who writes between diaper changes — his son’s diapers, not his own. He is a cigar-smoking, squid-eating member of the Alliterates, a group of literary troglodytes. When not penning high-fantasy adventures and composing unfinished symphonies, he dreams of being a pig farmer — in the tradition of his forbears, the infamous Moffet hog-rustlers of Kansas.
Rifts® Check List

Rifts® World Book One: Vampire Kingdoms. Vampires — Rifts® style, plus rules for creating travelling circuses and freak shows, warebeasts, D-Bees, and more. $16.95 — 160 pages.

Rifts® World Book Two: Atlantis. One of the best selling Rifts® sourcebooks ever. The truly alien domain of the Splugthor, plus Tattoo magic, Stone/pyramid magic, Bio-Wizardry, rune magic, rune weapons and kattani power armor and weapons. $16.95

Rifts® World Book Four: Africa. The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, 9 new O.C.C.s, necromancy, and world data. $15.95.

Rifts® World Book Five: Triax™ & the NGR. The ultimate robot and power armor book, plus the Gargoyle Empire and the New German Republic. $20.95 — 224 pages! By Kevin Siembieda.

Rifts® World Book Six: South America. 20 new O.C.C.s & R.C.C.s, biowarfare, uses of new weapons and equipment, tanks, boats, power armor, adventure ideas and more. $15.95 — 160 pages.

Rifts® Sourcebook One. Introducing the CS. 112 pages.

Rifts® Sourcebook Two: The Mechanoids®. More on Archie-3 and enter the Mechanoids. $11.95 — 112 pages.

Rifts® Sourcebook Three: Mindwerks. The Angel of Death, German world info, Poland and more. $11.95 — 112 pages.

Rifts Index & Adventure: Volume One. A comprehensive index for a dozen Rifts® titles plus 50 pages of adventures and adventure ideas. 12.95 — 96 pages.

Rifts Conversion Book One. 40 optional player races, 100 monsters, warplock magic, and conversion rules and ideas. Still only $19.95 — 224 pages!

Rifts® Conversion Book Two: Pantheons of the Megaverse®. Over 150 gods, goddesses, gods and goddesses done Rifts® style! Still only $19.95 — 208 pages.

Rifts® Dimension Book Three: Phase World™ Sourcebook. Over a dozen new O.C.C.s and R.C.C.s, solid energy spaceships, and more. $11.95 — 112 pages.

Catalog of Palladium Books®: Send 75 cents for our big 34 page catalog filled with exciting products, like Robotech®, Heroes Unlimited™, Beyond the Supernatural™, Nightbane™, Heroes Unlimited™, Ninjas & Superspies™, Macross III™, RECON®, Palladium RPG® (fantasy), miniatures, and more!

Ordering information: Add $1.50 for postage and handling per each book ordered. Send check or money order to Palladium Books®, Dept. D, 12455 Universal Drive, Taylor, MI 48180

Available at stores everywhere!
Convention Calendar Policies

This column is a service to our readers worldwide. Anyone may place a free listing for a game convention here, but the following guidelines must be observed.

In order to ensure that all convention listings contain accurate and timely information, all material should be either typed double-spaced or printed legibly on standard manuscript paper. The contents of each listing must be short and succinct. The information given in the listing must include the following, in this order:

1. Convention title and dates held
2. Site and location
3. Guests of honor (if applicable)
4. Special events offered
5. Registration fees or attendance requirements, and,
6. Address(es) where additional information and confirmation can be obtained.

Convention flyers, newsletters, and other mass-mailed announcements will not be considered for use in this column; we prefer to see a cover letter with the announcement as well. No call-in listings are accepted. Unless stated otherwise, all dollar values given for U.S. and Canadian conventions are in U.S. currency.

WARNING: We are not responsible for incorrect information sent to us by convention staff members. Please check your convention listing carefully! Our wide circulation ensures that over a quarter of a million readers worldwide see each issue. Accurate information is your responsibility.

Copy deadlines are the first Monday of each month, four months prior to the on sale date of an issue. Thus, the copy deadline for the December issue is the first Monday of September. Announcements for North American and Pacific conventions must be mailed to: Convention Calendar, DRAGON® Magazine, 201 Sheridan Springs Rd., Lake Geneva WI 53147, U.S.A. Announcements for Europe must be posted an additional month before the deadline to: Convention Calendar, DRAGON Magazine, TSR Limited, 120 Church End, Cherry Hinton, Cambridge CB1 3LB, United Kingdom.

If a convention listing must be changed because the convention has been cancelled, the dates have changed, or incorrect information has been printed, please contact us immediately. Most questions or changes should be directed to the magazine editors at TSR, Inc., (414) 248-3625 (U.S.A.). Questions or changes concerning European conventions should be directed to TSR Limited, (0223) 212517 (U.K.).

July Conventions

Origins
July 4-7 OH
Greater Columbus Convention Center, Columbus. Special guests: Phil Foglio, Doug Niles, Jeff Grubb, and Kate Novak. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games. Other activities: tournaments, the Magic: the Gathering national championship, and an auction. Registration: $34.95 preregistered. Andon Unlimited, P.O. Box 1740, Renton, WA 98057-1740, or e-mail: Andon@aol.com.

Gamefest
July 6-8 IL
Holy Innocents Church, Chicago. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games, and tournaments. Registration: $5. John Kavain, 857 North Hermitage, Chicago, IL 60622

Dexcon 5
July 10-14 NJ

Hexacon
July 12-14 AZ
Arizona State University Memorial Union, Tempe. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games. Other activities: dealers, tournaments, an auction, a miniatures painting contest, and a computer room. Registration: $15 preregistered. $20 on site. Hexacon 6, P.O. Box 62613, Phoenix, AZ 85082-2613.

Skirmishes '96
July 12-14 MO
Holiday Inn, Kansas City. Events: role-playing, card, board, computer, and miniatures games. Other activities: a masquerade ball, tournaments, dealers, and a miniatures painting contest. Registration: $25 on site. Skirmishes, c/o John Duda, 812 NE 100th Terrace, Kansas City, MO 64155.

VII-Khan
July 12-14 CO

Dark Con III
July 19-21 OK
Central Plaza Hotel, Oklahoma City. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games. Other activities: tournaments, computer gaming, and RPGA® Network events. Darkmore Inc., 624 SW 24th, Moore, OK 73160.

Quincon XI
July 19-21 IL
The Signature Room in the Franklin Square, Quincy. Events: role-playing, card, board, miniatures games, RPGA events, demos, and an auction. Registration: $15/weekend, $5/day. Quincon XI, P.O. Box 3892, Quincy, IL 62305-3892.

Action 2
July 20-22 IA
Plaza Lanes, Des Moines. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games, and RPGA tournaments. Tammy Jones, 1304 Boyd St., Des Moines, IA 50316.

Important:

DRAGON® Magazine does not publish phone numbers for conventions. Be certain that any address you send us is complete and correct.

To ensure that your convention listing makes it into our files, enclose a self-addressed stamped postcard with your first convention notice; we will return the card to show that it was received. You also might send a second notice one week after mailing the first. Mail your listing as early as possible, and always keep us informed of any changes. Please do not send convention notices by fax, as this method has not proven reliable.
Conline XXII
July 27-28 GEnie
TSR online roundtable, GEnie. RPGA tournaments, LIVING CITY™ and LIVING JUNGLE™ tournaments, Virtual Seattle, and guest speakers. E-mail: the.minstrel@genie.com.

August Conventions

Gamefest XVII
August 6-10 CA

Dragonflight ’96
August 23-25 WA
Bellarmine Hall on the Seattle University Campus, Seattle. Events: role-playing, card, board, miniatures, and network computer games. Other activities: seminars, dealers, and an auction. Registration: varies. Dragonflight, P.O. Box 417, Seattle, WA 98111-0417.

Migscon XVII
August 23-25 * The Royal Connaught Howard Johnson Plaza Hotel, Hamilton, Ontario. Events: miniature gaming, dealers, and a miniatures painting contest. Registration: varies. MIGS, P.O. Box 37013, Barton Postal Outlet, Hamilton, ON L8L 8E9, Canada.

Bubonicon 28
August 23-25 NM
Howard Johnson East, Albuquerque. Guests: Dennis McKiernan, Gordan Garb, and Lisa Scott. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games. Other activities: dealers, panels, an art show, a costume contest, movies, and more. Registration: $25 on site. NMSF Conference, P.O. Box 37257, Albuquerque, NM 87178.

Organized Kahn Fusion P.E.W.
August 24-25 PA

LA Con III
August 29-Sept. 3 CA

Emperor's Birthday Con
August 30-Sept. 1 IL

Gateway 16
August 30-Sept. 2 CA

Campbellford Scottish & Medieval Festival
August 31-Sept. 1 *
Campbellford Fair Grounds in Campbellford, Ontario. Events: role-playing games and a medieval feast. Registration: $6 preregistered, $8 on site. Harry Heydon, 81 Ranney St. S., Campbellford, Ontario, K0L 1L0, Canada.

Mage Con South XI
August 31-Sept. 2 IA

September Conventions

Wincon
September 13-15 *

Falcon '96
September 14 *
Lord Nelson Hotel, Halifax, Nova Scotia. Guests: Robert Sawyer, Peter Francis, Michael Gallant, and Luisa Nadalin. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games. Other activities: cabaret, a costume contest, and an art show and auction. Registration: varies. Falcon, P.O. Box 36123, Halifax, NS, B3J 3S9, Canada, or email: gtucker@fox.nstn.ns.ca.

Bogglecon 4
September 21 PA
Wind Gap Legion Hall on Broadway, Wind Gap. Events: LIVING CITY tournaments, card, board, and role-playing games, and free games demonstrations. Other activities: dealer tables, games auction and raffle, and canned food drive. Registration: $3, or $5 at the door. Most game events cost $1. For more information, send SASE to M. Griffith, 118 S. Broadway, Wind Gap, PA 18091.

Cog Con
September 27-29 MO
The Miner Recreation Building at the University of Missouri, Rolla. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games. Other activities: a comic show. Registration: $2. Atlantis Productions, 2654 Forest Park Dr., Dyer, IN 46311, or email: atlantis@tsrcom.com.

Hostile Aircraft Aces Tournament
September 27-29 NY
Travel Lodge, Kingston. Events: open gaming, and a hostile aircraft tournament. Registration: $20 preregistered, $25 on site. Goblin-
THE REVOLUTION TAKES TO THE STREETS

Whether they're urban spacescapes or tribal warlords, all your RPG characters need somewhere to live. So why not get down to some serious town planning with City Designer, the utterly amazing new add-on for Campaign Cartographer?

With its unique array of new features, City Designer is the ultimate tool for designing urban areas, adding over 150 symbols, including modern, modernist and fantastic building types as well as street furniture and rubble.

Anything from remote villages to sprawling cities can be created with consummate ease.

And as complete megadomains take over, you can expand your architectural ambitions. Design transport networks, straight or curved, in any direction you like. Create a city overview and detailed city blocks in separate files with the automatic temple generator.

What's more, City Designer can provide answers to all those questions that tend to arise in urban adventures:

Who or What is in that building?
Simply add building symbols to the 30 pre-defined layers and City Designer's fantastic graphic ability will automatically differentiate between them using different colours and fill styles. Link text files and detailed building plans to your city designs so you know precisely what's where.

Where is the...?
When you add a text table to your city plan, City Designer adds it to an A to Z. Just type the name you are interested in and you automatically zoom in on that area.

What's going on?
Link easily constructed random weather tables or encounters to your cities and you'll have the answer at a single mouse click.

Can you give me some background info?
City Designer lets you create information files with button hyperlinking, so you can make your own "Help File" for each city.

Who lives where?
For detailed demographics, use City Designer pre-defined layers and amazing graphics to indicate the wealth, cultural and other differences of the various city areas.

City Designer comes complete with an in-depth manual plus amazing tutorial example maps and all its fantastic features can be used with any existing Campaign Cartographer and Dungeon Designer designs - so you can link your entire campaign together.

Be really streetwise. Make your cities slicker. Get City Designer from ProFantasy.
In letter after letter, online and at game conventions, fans all want to know the same thing: “Why did TSR kill the DRAGONLANCE® world?” They’ve read Dragons of Summer Flame — the latest novel by the Saga’s foremost writing team, Margaret Weis and Tracy Hickman — and can’t believe that the stories about Krynn have truly ended.

Take heart — they haven’t.

Indeed, things certainly didn’t look good for the world of Krynn at the end of the fourth volume in the DRAGONLANCE Chronicles. The land of Ansalon has fought two wars: one against the dread Knights of Takhisis, intent on conquering the world, and the other against the all-powerful Chaos god, intent on destroying it. Through enormous sacrifice during this Summer of Chaos, the forces of Good prevail; however, the cataclysmic Chaos War has altered their world irrevocably: the land suffered mass devastation, many heroes died in battle, new monsters arrived to threaten the people, and the entire pantheon of gods withdrew to ensure the departure of Chaos. Worst of all, the magic of Krynn seemed to have fled with them.

But hope never dies for true heroes. At the end of the book, Fizban the Fabulous, wizard-avatar of the god Paladine, heralds a new Age of Mortals and encourages the young mage Palin Majere to seek the new magic. Throughout the land, all remember the valiant words Dark Knight Steel Brightblade spoke as he prepared to do battle with Chaos: “Whatever else happens, the people of Krynn still have each other.”
Thirty years later...

The new tales of this Age of Mortals shape the DRAGONLANCE: FIFTH AGE game and the new FIFTH AGE novels. The campaign setting picks up three decades after the close of Dragons of Summer Flame, using that book as a foundation for subsequent events.

During that intervening 30 years, Palin, nephew of Raistlin Majere, has discovered that the new magic actually springs from the most ancient arcane source of all. Meanwhile, the priestess Goldmoon has awakened to a mystic power within her own heart, fueled by the essence of life and the purity of emotion. These legendary figures begin to teach their newfound magic far and wide, renewing faith throughout the land.

However, the Fifth Age brings its own set of challenges to beleaguered Krynn. The Dark Knights begin rebuilding their evil order. Elven strife continues to strike at the heart of the land. And, worst of all, great dragons from far across the sea discover Ansalon. These dragons — larger and fiercer than anyone has ever seen — consider it a land ripe for conquest.

The fierce wyrms fight a terrible Dragon Purge, battling each other to the death for territory and power. This conflict sends the good dragons scurrying into hiding and creates casualties all across the continent:

- The mighty red dragon Malystryx teaches the innocent kender the meaning of fear when she burns their homeland to a cinder, turning once bright Kendermore into The Desolation.
- The white dragon Gellidus transforms his chosen domain, the temperate island of Southern Ergoth, into a great glacier.
- The green dragon Beryllinthranox steals the life spirits of her Qualinesti elf subjects to fashion powerful items of magic.
- The black dragon Onysablet turns much of the New Sea and central Ansalon into a foul swampy dominion, using human slaves as subjects for her dark experiments.
- One native dragon, Khellendros the Blue — whom men know as Skie, once Highlord Kitara's mount — seizes the city of Palanthas and much of northern Solamnia as his realm, employing the Knights of Takhisis to govern the populace as they did during the Summer of Chaos.

The Fifth Age calls upon heroes to wield might and magic against the menace of the great dragons. New characters join familiar ones against these enemies shadowing their land.

With all the changes sweeping across the face of Ansalon, the time has never been better to introduce a new game system to the setting. The publication of the DRAGONLANCE: FIFTH AGE game unveils the new Saga rules system, tailor-made to enhance the experience of telling tales in Krynn. This narrative game of dramatic fantasy adventure marks a break from the DRAGONLANCE world as a setting for the AD&D® game.

The FIFTH AGE game contains the tragedy, irony, humor, and romance that first attracted them to the Saga.

A narrative game

The Saga's rich literary heritage — more than 60 novels published in the series to date — lends itself to a more freeform, narrative style of game. To create such a game was the primary goal of lead designer, William W. Connors.

What's the difference between a narrative game and any other role-playing system?

It was vital that Connors minimize conventional role-playing mechanics for the FIFTH AGE game. He draws a parallel to the first role-playing many of us ever enjoyed — the ones we played in our backyards as kids. "No one ever stopped a Cowboys-and-Indians game and said, 'Your arrow flew only fifty feet, not fifty-five!' At least, not in my neighborhood."

The most difficult part was "deciding which rules were important enough to bolster the structure of the game and which didn't need to be there. It was a tough decision to make, but some things had to be streamlined or cut out entirely." For instance, the Saga rules minimize the importance of movement rules and timekeeping systems: Such concepts have to serve the needs of the story. "Trying to make a game that strikes a balance between rules and drama and adventure — that's always a challenge."

One of the first concepts to go was the idea that tables or charts could dictate the flow of an adventure. The referee is free to determine what's most dramatic for the plot, not bound by the results of random die rolls.

In order to put more game control in the hands of the players rather than the game master — or "Narrator," — the Saga... rules consider every action in the game from the hero's viewpoint. It doesn't sound unusual at first. If a hero wants to hit a draconian with his sword, he attempts an attack action. But if the draconian wants to attack him, the hero makes a defense action; his success or failure at defending himself dictates whether the draconian hits him.

This approach relieves the Narrator of having to act for every character or monster in the game. "It leaves the Narrator free to handle the role-playing," Connors explains, "free to focus on the acting side of things, not be a technical consultant."

The immense volume of lore to research for every DRAGONLANCE product also proved quite a challenge. "Weaving the novels into the ongoing tapestry — that goes beyond game mechanics," Williams says. But such challenges are to be expected when designing a new game, especially a freeform system like the Fifth Age. Such a system is long overdue, in Connors's opinion. "This sort of game should have been done a long time ago," he says, pointing out that freeform role-playing is becoming more and more evident today — many corporations even use role-playing techniques to train new employees. "And they don't have charts or movement rates. I think this is the next logical step."

The fate deck

Early in the design phase, the group decided that the new game would use a deck of cards, rather than the more traditional dice, to resolve the outcome of actions of the heroes in the game. The Fifth Age box comes with a deck of 82 DRAGONLANCE playing cards that is divided into nine suits: shields, arrows, helms, swords, moons, orbs, hearts, crowns, and dragons. Each card carries a value of one through nine (and one 10 card in the dragons suit) and bears a portrait of an important character in the DRAGONLANCE Saga, past, present and future. Each card also contains a couple of words describing the pictured character's personality. For instance, the Sturm Brightblade card, the one of swords, contains the legend: "Courageous and inspiring." Not only do these words "describe Sturm, they also have a function in play.

Under the Saga rules, every action a hero might take and each challenge he might face carries an assigned difficulty score. All players hold their own hand of Fate cards, which they play strategically to resolve their heroes' actions. If you play your cards in such a way that you beat the action's target score, you succeed at the action.

"We have a very elegant system of allowing you to succeed when it's dramatically important to the story," Connors says. "It lets you decide when you're going to 'roll the critical hit.' It lets you decide what events in the story are most important to the adventure's success" and play cards accordingly.

The system gives players this control over their heroes and game events by removing the randomness dice inject in a game. The player decides which card to play for each action his hero attempts, but he only has so many high cards in his hand. Is this the time to play the two or the seven?

This system of action resolution through card play is at the root of every Saga rule. "The system was designed to be very flexible," says Johnson, "Create one resolution rule that can be applied to every situation." That includes everything from reasoning to chases to magic use to combat. "All of this comes down to the same system."

Of course, it wouldn't be a game without some element of chance. Players never know what card they will draw next. "You're still stuck with the hand Fate dealt you," Johnson says.

Players use the Fate cards even before game play begins to generate their Fifth Age heroes. "I think one of the sparkling uses of cards is in character creation," Connors says.

Character creation

To create a hero, a player receives a hand of 12 cards, which he assigns to various attributes (such as Strength, Agility, Reason, etc.) and other characteristics, like wealth, personality, and reputation. The number on the card gives each attribute a score, while its suit, character, or legend offers additional background on the evolving hero.

The process of creating heroes introduces players to important game concepts and familiarizes them with using the cards. "Because we do this, people understand almost instantly what it's going to be like to play that character," Connors says.

This system has worked well in playtests, both in the TSR office and at the WINTER FANTASY™ game convention in Milwaukee earlier this year. "In half an hour, people who weren't gamers had a clear idea of who these characters were," Connors says. "Novices can sit down and create a character, have a good understanding of the game, and be joking about what it will be like to play him or her."

Next to the process of hero creation, Connors is most proud of the new Saga magic system. "You don't use spell lists and pages of spell descriptions — you decide what the spell will do, then figure out how hard it is to cast." This system reflects the spirit of how magic has always worked in the DRAGONLANCE novels. The heroes usually have the spell they need to save the day. "You never see Raistlin pull up and say, 'Sorry, guys, I didn't memorize the right spell today.'"

The world of the Fifth Age

A narrative game also needs a fully fleshed-out setting to draw from, "the link to a dramatic format like books or movies," Connors says, "anything that has a long tradition of storytelling and drama. We were fortunate enough to be able to do this with DRAGONLANCE."

The major new element in the world of Krynn in the Fifth Age is the presence of the great dragons.

The dragons of Krynn

"It started out when [vice president of Creative Services] Jim Ward said, 'Put really big, mean dragons in this game,'" Connors recalls. To begin with, Connors looked at the role dragons have played recently in the DRAGONLANCE Saga: a great menace, true, but also strong allies and companions. Dragons had become too familiar on Krynn. "Dragons had to be moved beyond the level of men," he says.

In their conquest of Ansalon, these dragons have swept whole nations out of existence and forever altered vast portions of the continent. They hold a position "sort of halfway between gods and men," Connors says. "Now that the gods have left, they're the closest thing to it."

With a major new threat like the great dragons, it seems only right to introduce a new force to oppose them. That force is the Legion of Steel.

The Legion, founded by Dark Knight Steel Brightblade's adoptive mother in his name, is a new order of freedom fighters committed to the struggle against the great dragons and to the importance of people working together, free of outdated knighthood codes. Williams considers the new Legion of Steel story thread "exciting and challenging to pick up, filling out the back story from the time of the founding and carrying it through the events we already have in place."

Of course, the rise of the Legion of Steel and other events of the Fifth Age have had a profound effect on Ansalon's two Knightly orders. In the case of the Knights of Solamnia, Williams says, "They've had this bittersweet realization that the best of their traditions have carried them along, but in the process they have strayed considerably from their path."

The Knights continue to dedicate themselves to their divine sponsors but, now that these gods have withdrawn, "they're also dealing with the fact that they will succeed or fail on their own efforts," Williams says.

The Dark Knights seem to be getting around the problem of the absence of their patron goddess by more or less denying it. The new leader of the Dark Knights, Mirielle Abrena, seems to lack some of the honorable convictions of her esteemed predecessor, Ariakan. "The Knights of Takhisis, as I see them now, are based on a deception," says Williams. "You're really talking about a group of people who've been seduced by their leaders. Abrena has convinced her followers that Takhisis is coming back, that this is only temporary. They're promised big things in the very near future if they work hard enough — and ignore little things like ethics."

The magic of Krynn

In addition to expanding the treatments of the Knighthoods, Williams has been working on expanding the new system of magic on Krynn. This new magic, he assures readers, "is drawn from the lore of the setting. It's not something that's created brand-new. We've gone back and picked up a bit of the Saga." This thread, something only hinted at in the final scene of Dragons of Summer Flame, will be explored thoroughly in Williams's forthcoming game supplement The Last Tower: The legacy of Raistlin.

Also receiving the spotlight in The Last Tower are the three most important wielders of magic in the Fifth Age. After decades of struggling to find the new magic, as Fizban instructed him, Palin Majere finally succeeded in resurrecting almost forgotten arcane methods. Now, along with the mysterious Master of the Tower of Wayreth and the equally enigmatic Shadow Sorcerer, he remains one of the most powerful figures in all of Ansalon today.

And just who is this Master of the Tower? This cloaked figure presumably appeared in Wayreth Forest just after the Chaos War and the subsequent destruction of the Tower of High Sorcery in Palanthas. The Master still administers tests of magic to worthy sorcerers, awards magical items from past ages, and decides how the Last Tower will affect the world in the Fifth Age.

Connors has his favorite characters too, including the Shadow Sorcerer, who walked out of the Desolation one day and helped the Last Conclave of Wizards rediscover magic. Connors also created the afflicted kender Belladonna, leader of Hylo. She lived through the Kender Flight that followed Malystryx's arrival in her original homeland — but not without scars, both literal and emotional, "The idea of a kender who wakes up screaming every night is kind of neat," Connors remarks, "but maybe I've been working in the RAVENLOFT® world too long."

Of course, he realizes that the readers' response is what really determines which characters will become important in the future of the Fifth Age. "If people thought Raistlin was just some goofy wizard, somebody'd have killed him off."

Adventuring in the Fifth Age

Considering the importance of story and character to the DRAGONLANCE Saga, the design team felt it important to structure the new FIFTH AGE adventures around those primary factors. "These are not map-keyed adventures," Connors says. "We don't say, 'Here's a map of the Tomb of Huma — have an adventure.'"

Instead, the adventures are story-driven and scene-based, "just like a play or a movie would be," Connors explains. A FIFTH AGE adventure is divided into acts, each of which features action rising through a series of scenes to a climax, the nature of which depends on heroes' choices along the way. A story might open with a role-playing scene, progress to a combat scene, followed by one that involves puzzle-solving. "The adventure becomes a series of linked scenes, not a series of linked rooms," he says.

Inside and out, the FIFTH AGE is clearly a game that knows its roots. The game's box is designed to resemble an old-fashioned book, and literary terms are used throughout the text. "We've tried to give people the information they need in a format that feels like a book,” Connors says. “That’s why we call [GMs] ‘Narrators’—they’re not in charge of a dungeon or a map, they’re in charge of a story.

 Appropriately, the first story arc in the Fifth Age line—a five-part series of accessory-adventures called Dragons of a New Age—features important links with the forthcoming novel, Dawning of a New Age, by Jean Rabe.

Great expectations?

Many lovers of the Dragonlance Saga are eagerly awaiting the Fifth Age game’s August release. Talk continues on-line and at conventions about the new game system and the unfolding events of the Fifth Age.

“We are producing this game for every fan of Dragonlance, whether they just read the books or play the computer game,” Johnson stresses. “It is an opportunity for them to experience the adventures for themselves.”

How will Dragonlance fans react to the switch from AD&D mechanics to the Saga rules?

“AD&D fans who’ve really been caught up in the storyline will be pretty excited about it,” Williams predicts. Johnson agrees. “If you were a fan of the AD&D game, you will be an even bigger fan of this game.”

However, this isn’t necessarily the Krynn they remember. After all, the Chaos War changed the world in many ways. Players can experience those changes through the new game system.

“The underpinnings of the world have changed,” Williams points out, “everything from the way your character looks to the way magic works. [Players] are definitely going to feel the effects of the new reality, just the way residents of Krynn would.”

In addition, as fans will see when they use the AD&D character and translation rules (included in the Fifth Age box) to bring their heroes forward, a few other things have changed as well. The Saga rules alter the balance of power a bit, making certain monsters even stronger, compared to heroes, than ever before.

“It may be the Age of Mortals,” Williams says, “but the monsters that are left are lean, mean fighting machines. Ogres deserve some respect now.” But then again, heroes are often measured by the power of the foes they combat.

Connors predicts that the Fifth Age will surprise gamers who “are used to rolling dice. I think its going to be unfamiliar to a lot of people — some people will embrace it for that: ‘It’s different; that’s cool.’”

Johnson agrees that the game will attract those who love to try new systems. “Fans of games will find this a refreshing new direction. This goes back to the core of what drew us all to role-playing in the first place: the ability to experience a story, be part of a tale of wonder, and to make a difference in the outcome through one’s personal decisions.”

And the game’s streamlined rules system is great for those who love Dragonlance but may never have role-played before. “Certainly the game’s uncluttered nature lends itself real well to people who are familiar only with the fiction,” Williams says. “A brand-new player is not confronted with rows and rows of numbers and formulas to derive their character.”

In fact, Dragonlance readers have an advantage over experienced gamers less familiar with the world. “We’ve written this game so that your knowledge of the setting is an asset from the beginning,” says Williams. “They [new players] encounter familiar terms and characters and begin to see why characters in the books can do the things that they do.”

For instance, a hero’s attributes are described in terms of the well-known Heroes of the Lance who exemplify these traits. Each card in one’s Hand of Fate (the hand of cards a player uses to play the game) portrays a famous — or infamous — character of the Saga. Your knowledge of the world relates directly to what you see.

With the publication of the Fifth Age, Johnson sees the Dragonlance game coming full circle. “[Dragonlance] was a new path for role-playing games back in the 1980s, and it continues to be.”

Clearly, Dragonlance is far from dead.

On the contrary — the legends of the Fifth Age have only just begun!

Sue Weinlein Cook begun at TSR as the editorial assistant for the book department. In addition to her work in the Fifth Age game, she has also edited games in the Birthricht™ line.

CC-Fonts 1

CC-Fonts 1 is a collection of 28 carefully crafted text and symbol fonts for Campaign Cartographer that will enhance the style and authenticity of any CC design.

With new Script, Gothic, Cyrillic and Italic fonts, character records become things of beauty. Attractive runic fantasy fonts transform player maps into arcane mysteries. Accurate charts and tables are easy to create using the new non-proportional fonts. Select from a huge variety of symbol fonts including Astrological, Modern Mapping and Meteorological. CC-Fonts 1 is fully compatible with any Campaign Cartographer add-on.

SEE FOLLOWING PAGES...
I would like to add to Rick Maffei’s comments in issue #228’s Forum column. Therein he reports on several problems concerning the Muscle subability score.

I agree that starting a character with a Strength of 20 is possible under the rules stated on page 13 of the PLAYER’S OPTION®, Skills & Powers book. This undoubtedly presents the DM with many difficulties if he is running a standard campaign. However, we must remember that 18/00 is the maximum Strength for human fighters as well as most other races.

Why is it possible to get such a Strength if it is not allowed? The rules in this tome were written taking into account the possibility that a party might consist wholly or partially of non-human and non-demihuman PCs. Turning to page 37 of the same book, under the heading Other Races, we find this option clarified. It states that, at the DM’s option, Players may choose any manner of being as a PC. The examples of incorporating a DARK SUN® campaign character is given. Those characters have ability scores ranging from 5-20.

There is still the possibility that a fighter with a 16 Strength score could achieve and 18/xx Muscle score. The only penalty would be that his Stamina of 14 would allow him to carry only 55 lbs. before being encumbered. Since the encumbrance rules in the PHB are listed as optional, there well could be no penalty for a low Stamina.

This underscores a problem with all subabilities. Allowing a character with a modest ability score to choose to make one subability exceptional at the cost of the other creates and unbalancing factor. We’ve discussed the problems with Strength subabilities. Let’s look at the other abilities. For this discussion, let’s assume that the ability score is high enough to make a difference in the subabilities, say 16. A 10 in an ability score, for instance, does virtually nothing, as the subabilities could be only as high as 12 or as low as 8, where there are generally few or no adjustments.

The subabilities of Dexterity are Aim and Balance. The properties of Aim are missile adjustment, Pick Pockets, and Open Locks. The properties of Balance are reaction adjustment, defense adjustment, Move Silently, and Climb Walls. If the character is not a thief or archer, this choice is a no-brainer. A +4 on saves vs. dodging something and -4 on Armor Class can be gained with no penalties to any Aim property. A thief or archer character would just have to choose in which properties he wanted bonuses. Once again, the properties of the other subability would suffer no penalties.

The subabilities of Constitution are Health and Fitness. The properties of Health are System Shock and the poison save. The properties of Fitness are hit point adjustment and Resurrection Survival. This is an easy choice for any class. All classes, except fighter, need only a 16 in Fitness to gain maximum bonus hit points of +2. Thus they need only a 14 in Constitution. A fighter would, of course, attempt to get an 18 for the full bonus. The differences this would make in the properties of Health would not be appreciable.

The subabilities of Intelligence are Reason and Knowledge. The properties of Reason are spell level, maximum number of spells, and spell immunity. The properties of Knowledge are bonus proficiencies and percentage to learn spell. All classes except wizard would maximize Knowledge because Reason deals mostly with spell ability. These subabilities do present the wizard with some tough choices. Personally, I would sacrifice my percentage to learn spell for higher spell level and number of spells.

The subabilities of Wisdom are Intuition and Willpower. The properties of Intuition are bonus spells and percentage for spell failure. The properties of Willpower are magic defense adjustment and spell immunity. Cleric PCs would mostly choose to increase Intuition because its properties could give them a considerable bonus. Other classes would boost Willpower as it is the subability that would give them a bonus.

The subabilities of Charisma are Leadership and Appearance. The properties of Leadership are favor points and number of henchmen. The property of Appearance is reaction adjustment. These subabilities are perhaps the most balanced, although I suspect that reaction rolls would occur more frequently during the game.

Throughout, I have mostly considered only single-classed human PCs. Obviously, multi-class PCs would have tougher choices.

How would I fix these problems? I wouldn’t. These rules are purely optional, and I don’t plan on using them. Each DM must make his own decision to use them or not, based on his campaign. In making the choice, the DM should keep in mind how these rules can be used or abused.

Tim Merrett
Logansport, IN

I’d like to respond to Gary Stahl’s letter in issue #229. I agree that NPCs in published game material should follow previously established rules. His example of the chaotic psionicists in the DARK SUN® supplement, The Will and the Way, clearly violates the rule that psionicists can’t be chaotic. Of course, if some rationale had been given as to why these particular psionicists were chaotic, then that faux pas would have been mitigated.

While such consistency is desirable, it isn’t always possible. In the upcoming FORGOTTEN REALM® supplement, Heroes’ Lorebook, many of the heroes of the setting’s novels are codified or updated for use in the AD&D game. More than a few of these characters, when considered strictly as formalized game characters, break AD&D game rules left and right.

And in some cases, game rules just don’t exist for what is described in the novels. Alias, the tattooed swords-woman from the Kate Novak and Jeff Grubb novels, for example, is an artificial life form. The Seven Sisters (plus Elimister and Kheilen) are all the Chosen of Mystra, with effective immortality and a slew of magical abilities. No rules exist in the game for creating such a life form or becoming the favored of a deity. Drizzt Do’Urden, probably the most popular FR character of all, broke all sorts of game rules when he first appeared, and his popularity even spawned new rules to “allow” him to do in the game what he does in the novels. Strictly following all the game rules for these NPCs would have genericized them and they probably wouldn’t be half as appealing because of it. The fact that they’re different is part of what makes them so popular.

Also, speaking as a DM, I’ve always believed in the maxim that NPCs needn’t follow all the same rules as PCs all the time. (Situation #1: “Oh look, an evil wizard. He just cast a cone of cold, so he’s at least 9th level, maybe higher. Okay, you guys know the routine. Stay back and pepper him with arrows first, ’cause he’s probably got a stoneskin on himself, and spread out and find some cover so his fireballs and lightning bolts can’t get all of us. And watch for a hold person on our own spell-casters.”) A nonstandard villain can be more exciting for everyone in the game. Plus, throwing the players a curve every once in a while keeps them on their toes. (Situation #2: “Look, his magic missile fires only two bolts! Hah! That means he’s less than 5th level; c’mon, let’s get him! Whaa, what do you mean each bolt caused 12 hp damage?!”)

One of my personal NPC rules (and this goes for monsters and creatures as well) is, “Anything the PCs can do, my NPCs can do too.” If the PCs use kits from the PLAYER’S OPTION: Skills & Powers book, the fighting-style specializations or the critical-hits system from PLAYER’S OPTION: Combat & Tactics book, so do my NPCs. If the PCs start developing set tactics in certain situations, pretty soon some NPC villains develop ways to upset the PCs’ pre-planned tactics. All this prevents the game from becoming routine. I’m forced to come up with ways to handle the players’ latest tricks and schemes, and once I’ve done that, the players must develop new gimmicks and tactics for their PCs to use.

Of course, this sort of occurrence must be handled carefully. If this is overdone, power escalation and player/DM rivalry could become a problem. I’m not saying that DMs should be out to defeat the heroic PCs, but they should throw just enough monkey wrenches into the PCs’ plans to keep the players challenged and avoid the dreaded complacency. When done properly and with a regard toward game balance, “bending” the game’s rules for the occasional NPC isn’t a bad thing. It’s just one of the DM’s tools for insuring continued interest in the game campaign. The AD&D game is about heroes, and heroes should win out in the end; however, that doesn’t mean I’m obligated as a DM to make it easy for them. A hard-won victory where the players had to out-think and not just out-dice their foes is much more heroic and much more likely to be remembered years after the adventure itself has ended.

I would like to voice my complaint about level restrictions on demi-humans. In most every racial description, the race is adept in at least one area: elven wizards, dwarven fighters, gnomish illusionists, and halfling thieves. I fully realize that a 15th level character is quite powerful, but what about the halfling thief? After a few short years of adventuring, he’s reached his limit and might as well retire. How about the elven wizard? He could live his whole life adventuring and never be able to cast 8th- or 9th-level spells if his DM doesn’t allow the slow advancement option. In almost every fantasy realm that I’ve ever heard of, elven wizards were at one time or another the most powerful that ever existed. How come all of a sudden they became weaklings compared to humans? Elves have more patience and are more careful with their spells than are humans, but because of that they should be able to become at least as powerful as any human wizard.

I believe every demi-human race should be allowed unlimited advancement in at least one class, if for no other reason than a natural affinity for that class.

I personally don’t believe that such a rule would disrupt the flow of a game. I don’t know about the rest of you DMs, but I’m pretty sick of all the human parties that keep turning up. Whatever your opinion, I’d like to hear it.

Steven Shaffer
Oroville, CA

Dale Donovan
TSR, Inc.

I would like to voice my complaint about level restrictions on demi-humans. In most every racial description, the race is adept in at least one area: elven wizards, dwarven fighters, gnomish illusionists, and halfling thieves. I fully realize that a 15th level character is quite powerful, but what about the halfling thief? After a few short years of adventuring, he’s reached his limit and might as well retire. How about the elven wizard? He could live his whole life adventuring and never be able to cast 8th- or 9th-level spells if his DM doesn’t allow the slow advancement option. In almost every fantasy realm that I’ve ever heard of, elven wizards were at one time or another the most powerful that ever existed. How come all of a sudden they became weaklings compared to humans? Elves have more patience and are more careful with their spells than are humans, but because of that they should be able to become at least as powerful as any human wizard.

I believe every demi-human race should be allowed unlimited advancement in at least one class, if for no other reason than a natural affinity for that class.

I personally don’t believe that such a rule would disrupt the flow of a game. I don’t know about the rest of you DMs, but I’m pretty sick of all the human parties that keep turning up. Whatever your opinion, I’d like to hear it.

Steven Shaffer
Oroville, CA

One of my personal NPC rules (and this goes for monsters and creatures as well) is, “Anything the PCs can do, my NPCs can do too.” If the PCs use kits from the PLAYER’S OPTION: Skills & Powers book, the fighting-style specializations or the critical-hits system from PLAYER’S OPTION: Combat & Tactics book, so do my NPCs. If the PCs start developing set tactics in certain situations, pretty soon some NPC villains develop ways to upset the PCs’ pre-planned tactics. All this prevents the game from becoming routine. I’m forced to come up with ways to handle the players’ latest tricks and schemes, and once I’ve done that, the players must develop new gimmicks and tactics for their PCs to use.

Of course, this sort of occurrence must be handled carefully. If this is overdone, power escalation and player/DM rivalry could become a problem. I’m not saying that DMs should be out to defeat the heroic PCs, but they should throw just enough monkey wrenches into the PCs’ plans to keep the players challenged and avoid the dreaded complacency. When done properly and with a regard toward game balance, “bending” the game’s rules for the occasional NPC isn’t a bad thing. It’s just one of the DM’s tools for insuring continued interest in the game campaign. The AD&D game is about heroes, and heroes should win out in the end; however, that doesn’t mean I’m obligated as a DM to make it easy for them. A hard-won victory where the players had to out-think and not just out-dice their foes is much more heroic and much more likely to be remembered years after the adventure itself has ended.

I would like to voice my complaint about level restrictions on demi-humans. In most every racial description, the race is adept in at least one area: elven wizards, dwarven fighters, gnomish illusionists, and halfling thieves. I fully realize that a 15th level character is quite powerful, but what about the halfling thief? After a few short years of adventuring, he’s reached his limit and might as well retire. How about the elven wizard? He could live his whole life adventuring and never be able to cast 8th- or 9th-level spells if his DM doesn’t allow the slow advancement option. In almost every fantasy realm that I’ve ever heard of, elven wizards were at one time or another the most powerful that ever existed. How come all of a sudden they became weaklings compared to humans? Elves have more patience and are more careful with their spells than are humans, but because of that they should be able to become at least as powerful as any human wizard.

I believe every demi-human race should be allowed unlimited advancement in at least one class, if for no other reason than a natural affinity for that class.

I personally don’t believe that such a rule would disrupt the flow of a game. I don’t know about the rest of you DMs, but I’m pretty sick of all the human parties that keep turning up. Whatever your opinion, I’d like to hear it.

Steven Shaffer
Oroville, CA

Campagne Cartographer

FROM GOOD RPG STORES OR MAIL ORDER

US orders from RPG International
Call 1-800-168-3939.
To order by Visa, Discover or MasterCard or send check or money order.
Shipping $5 for 1 item or $5 for multiple items.
RPG International, 24+1 152nd Ave NE
Suite A, Redmond, WA 98052

World-wide orders from ProFantasy Software Ltd.
Phone: 0181-675 1155
To order by Visa, MasterCard or Delta or send Cheque or money order including
$5 p&p to: ProFantasy Software Ltd.,
Garrett’s Building, Cathles Road
London SW12 9LD

All ProFantasy’s products are accompanied by a comprehensive tutorial and reference manual.
Entitlement to our NewBook and full technical support. All add-ons require Campaign Cartographer 1.2

Campaign Cartographer $49.95 $69.95
City Designer $24.95 $36.95
Dungeon Designer $19.95 $29.95
CC-Fonts 1 $19.95 $31.95
Upgrades Call Call

THE REVOLUTION CONTINUES !™

http://www.profantasy.com/profant for product information, previews, demos, utilities, map sharing and vendor locations

D RAGON #231 83
GOT YOUR MAPS ON VINYL?

Battlemats™ and Megamats™ are the original vinyl mats for role-playing or miniature combat games. Durable padded vinyl for years of use, a multitude of grid styles, portable and best of all, reusable. You can’t find a better playing field anywhere.

Another fine product brought to you by the folks at

Visit these well-stocked retailers!

Vinyl Mat Headquarters

Germany

89077 Ulm
Imp's Shop
AZ

Glendale
Lion's Den

Tempe
Things For Thinkers #2

Tucson
Things For Thinkers #1

CA

Carmichael
Viking Hobby

Chico
Fantasy Game World

Springfield
The Android's Dungeon

CT
Citadel Game Store
IL
Groton

Mr. Prospector
NY

Games Plus

New York
Complex Strategist
KS

Lexington
Game and Hobby
MI

Ann Arbor
Rider's Mail Order
PA

Centre Square
Quality Hobby
TX

Arlington
Lone Star Comics

816-743-5799
800-743-5799
816-882-8885
916-962-4263
916-362-7679
602-366-8061
602-915-0009
602-968-8819
602-968-8819
602-962-4263
816-335-6465
860-445-0644
847-577-9656
212-685-3880
913-962-4263
817-265-0431
Cons
Continued from page 74

tooth Enterprises, 46 Highland St., Reading, MA 01867.

Shorecon '96
September 27-29 NJ

Nuke-Con
September 28-29 NE
Holiday Inn Central, Omaha. Guests: Tom Prusa and Fredd Groham. Events: role-playing, card, board, and miniatures games. Other activities: tournaments. Registration: varies. Nuke-Con, 13115 Josephine Circle, Omaha, NE 68138, or email: nuke-con@synergy.net.

Organized Kahn Fusion-Battletech
September 28-29 PA
Newberry Town Fire Hall, Etters. This is a Battletech - only con featuring: single, lance, free for all, and mechwarrior games. Other activities: dealers and a miniatures painting contest. Registration: varies. M. Forner's Games Only Emporium, 230 S. 8th St., Lemoyne, PA 17043.

---

* indicates a product produced by a company other than TSR, Inc.

---

Some people just play games.
You take your fun seriously!

Save time and money running your own campaigns with new adventures from the pages of DUNGEON Adventures. Expand your knowledge of the games you play with the latest spells, magic items, kits, and inside information found only between the covers of DRAGON Magazine.
Second Edition Palladium Fantasy RPG
The “Rifts®” of fantasy gaming!

Old Ones, 2nd Edition
Palladium Fantasy Book Two

Old Ones explores the Palladium World with detailed maps and descriptions of over 36 town and city locations of the Timiro Kingdom. Plus new adventures in the mysterious dwarven ruins known as the Place of Magic, more on the dreaded Old Ones, world information, new character classes and other cool stuff.

- Written by Kevin Siembieda.
- Cover by McKenna. Interior art by Scott Johnson.
- 190+ pages: $19.95, plus $2.00 for postage and handling.
- Available at stores everywhere now!

Monsters & Animals, 2nd Edition

Monsters & Animals, 2nd Edition presents over 100 different monsters and creatures of magic, including giants, faerie folk, entities, sea serpents, Bearmen, Raylings, Lizard Mages, Watermix, Sphinxes and many more. Includes mythical and fictional monsters of all kinds, many of which are available to players as optional character classes.

The animal section contains nearly 200 animals from canines and felines to poisonous snakes and birds of prey.

All monsters and animals are provided with the revised Second Edition stats which make them suitable for use in Rifts®, Heroes Unlimited™, Nightbane™ and the entire Palladium Megaverse™.

- Written by Kevin Siembieda.
- Cover by Christopher Moeller. Interior art by Siembieda.
- 190+ pages: $19.95, plus $2.00 for postage and handling.
- Available at stores everywhere now!

Adventures on the High Seas, 2nd Ed.
Palladium Fantasy Book Three

High Seas, Second Edition explores exotic island kingdoms of the Palladium World, including the Island of the Cyclops, Kingdom of Byzantium, Floreny Islands and over 20 islands and 20 cities. Occupational Character Classes for the pirate, sailor, bard, gladiator, necromancer and others. Necromancy magic, world information, new character sheets and six adventures.

- Written by Kevin Siembieda.
- Cover by McKenna. Interior art by Scott Johnson.
- 190+ pages: $19.95, plus $2.00 for postage and handling.
- Available at stores everywhere in August.

Dragons & Gods

Coming this fall from Kevin Siembieda, scores of gods, religions, cults, and dragons, plus world information.

- Written by Kevin Siembieda.
- Cover by John Zeleznik.
- 160 pages. $16.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling.
- Estimated date of release: November, 1996.

Catalog of Palladium Books®: Send 75 cents for our big, 34 page catalog filled with exciting products, like Robotech®, Heroes Unlimited™, Beyond the Supernatural™, Nightbane™, Heroes Unlimited™, Ninjas & Spies™, Maccross II™, RECON®, Palladium RPG® (fantasy), miniatures, and more!

Palladium Books® 12455 Universal Drive
Dept. D Taylor, MI 48180

Available at stores everywhere!

Copyright 1996
Palladium Books®, Rifts® and Megaverse® are registered trademarks owned by Kevin Siembieda and Palladium Books Inc. Mind Mage, Old Ones and other titles are trademarks owned by Kevin Siembieda and Palladium Books Inc.
WELCOME TO GAMES WORKSHOP
MAIL ORDER
1-800-394-GAME

FAST...CONVENIENT...ACCURATE...FRIENDLY SERVICE
Games Workshop Mail Order is a great way to purchase all the latest releases of Citadel Miniatures and games from Games Workshop. Our Mail Order staff are all Games Workshop enthusiasts and will be more than happy to advise you in any way while providing you with the friendliest service possible with your order...

...And speaking of service, just look what Games Workshop Mail Order has to offer you now!!

AIRBORNE EXPRESS 2-DAY SERVICE AT NO EXTRA CHARGE Games Workshop Mail Order now has a new contract with Airborne that will provide you with a 2-Day service to anyone across the Continental U.S. (3-Day to AK & HI) and you will only pay the normal ground shipping charges. This means all of your future orders with Games Workshop Mail Order should arrive on your doorstep within two business days from when it is shipped out!

...And speaking of when your order will be shipped, check this out!!

SPEEDY SAME DAY SHIPPING
The Games Workshop Mail Order staff is growing and we are now able to offer you Same-Day
Shipping. This means that all orders that are phoned in or faxed in to us by 5 PM Eastern Standard Time should be shipped out that very same day. Our new Same-Day shipping policy will also apply to orders that are mailed in to us, as they will be shipped out the same day that we receive them.

NEW RELEASE PRE-ORDERS
You have probably already seen some of the recent Games Workshop Mail Order specials for Pre-Ordering your copy our new boxed games, but did you know... that you can place a Pre-Order for all of the unreleased miniatures, plastic & pewter boxed sets, latest supplements and hottest new games. Just give the Mail Order Gangers a call and we’ll tell you everything you need to know about all the exciting new releases. All of the orders for new releases are sent out during the first couple days of the week of the release so that everyone should get them by the end of the week, which is the same time as they’re available in most retail shops all over the U.S. So, if you can’t bear the thought of not having the latest releases in your grasp as soon as they are available then the Pre-Order service is just what you need!

Games Workshop games and the entire supporting range of Citadel Miniatures can be found at any number of independent retail stores across the U.S. and Canada. To find out which stores near you carry Games Workshop products, give us a call toll free at 1-800-492-8820. If there are no local retailers in your general vicinity, call our speedy Mail Order Service at 1-800-394-GAME.

Our Mail Order department is staffed by gaming enthusiasts who would be happy to help you with your order, tell you about the upcoming releases, or fill you in on the monthly Mail Order specials.
Check out the Games Workshop Website at: http://www.games-workshop.com/

MAIL ORDER HOURS
Mon. through Fri. 9:00 am to 9:00 pm
Sat. 10:00 am to 6:00 pm - Sun. 12:00 pm to 5:00 pm
CALL 1-800-394-GAME

CUSTOMER SERVICE
To find out more about Independent Retailers in your area call:
CALL 1-800-492-8820
If you have any questions on the games produced by TSR, Inc., "Sage Advice" can answer them. In the United States and Canada, send your letters to: Sage Advice, DRAGON® Magazine, 201 Sheridan Springs Road, Lake Geneva, WI 53147, U.S.A. In Europe, send your questions to: Sage Advice, DRAGON Magazine, TSR Ltd., 120 Church End, Cherry Hinton, Cambridge, CB1 3LB, U.K. You can also e-mail questions to tssage@aol.com.

We are no longer able to make personal replies. Please send no SASEs with your question.

Join the Sage this month as he reveals a method for creating psionicist PCs with the rules presented in the PLAYER'S OPTION™: Skills & Powers book and considers a few magical oddities from the AD&D® game.

I'm sure you've been asked these questions dozens of times, so how about some answers? How do you create psionicist PCs using the rules in the Skills & Powers book? How do the subabilities from Chapter 2 affect psionicists and wild talents? Can non-psionicists buy wild talents with character points?

Well, not exactly dozens of times, but often enough (three times in the past month). Here's an unofficial method for building psionicists with character points, largely based on some excellent suggestions from reader Emery Wilson:

A psionicist receives 35 character points to spend on class abilities. Abilities cost 5-15 points. Any unspent points can be saved to buy proficiencies or saved for use in the game.

All psionicists use the saving throw and MTHAC0 tables on page 149 of the Skills & Powers book.

Psionicists use the THAC0 table on page 149 of the Skills & Powers book unless they purchase better combat abilities during character creation.

All psionicists use the experience level table on page 154 of the Skills & Powers book.

Psionicists use the Psionic Progression table on page 154 Skills & Powers book unless they purchase better psychic abilities during character creation.

Psionicist roll six-sided dice to determine hit points unless they purchase larger hit dice.

Unless stated otherwise, a character can take each ability only once and only when the character is first created.

Armor Use (5/10): The psionicist can employ small shields and padded, leather, studded leather, or hide armor. As a 10-point ability the psionicist can use medium or large shields, any of the armor types listed above, plus brigandine, chain mail, ring mail, scale mail, or metal lamellar armor. If the psionicist does not take this ability, he can wear no armor and cannot employ shields.

Contact (5/10): The psionicist receives contact proficiency any time he has five defense modes. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist. If the psionicist does not take this power, he has an open mind, just as if he were a non-psionic psionicist.

Penetrating Mind (10): The psionicist can penetrate physical barriers with his mind more readily than other psionicists can. It takes two inches of lead or iron, four inches of obsidian, or two feet of rock to block the psionicist's clairsentient and telepathic powers. Note that most psionic powers require line of sight; this ability does not negate a blocked line of sight (see Skills & Powers, page 150). This ability has no effect on psionic combat and does not allow the psionicist to ignore magical or psychic barriers that block psionic powers.
PSP bonus: The psionicist has a potent mind and rolls eight-sided dice for psionic strength points instead of six-sided dice. The psionicist still gains only three extra PSPs plus his Wisdom bonus per level at 10th level and beyond.

Psychic Adept (10): The psionicist receives extra powers according to the table below instead of the Psionic Progression table in the Skills & Powers book. The two disciplines the psionicist chooses at first level count as primary disciplines (see Skills & Powers, page 154).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Exp</th>
<th>Total Disciplines</th>
<th>Total Sciences</th>
<th>Total Devotions</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>12</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>14</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>23</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Range Boost (5/10): The ranges of all powers within the psionicist’s primary discipline increase by 25%. If the psionicist is a psychic adept, he has two primary disciplines. At base cost (5), the ranges of only one discipline’s powers increase. For a cost of 10 character points, the ranges of powers for both disciplines increase. All powers with ranges of 0, self, or touch remain unaffected by this ability.

Warrior Hit Point Bonus (5): The psionicist gains bonus hit points from a high Constitution score as if he were a warrior.

Weapon Specialization (15): The psionicist can specialize in the use of a particular weapon. This ability is useless unless the character also chooses the weapon use ability (below), even if the psionicist specializes in a martial art or nonlethal combat. The character-point cost for gaining proficiency and specialization in the weapon must be met when the character chooses weapon proficiencies.

Weapon Use (5/10): The psionicist can employ the following small weapons: hand crossbow, dagger, dart, dirk, knife, scourge, sickle, and short sword. As a 10-point ability the psionicist can use any of the weapons above, plus the following slightly larger weapons: short bow, club, light crossbow, hand/throwing axe, javelin, quarterstaff, sling, spear, and war club. If the psionicist does not take this ability, he can employ no weapons at all, relying instead on his mental powers in combat.

Psionics and subabilities: If the rules for subabilities are in play, then Constitution/Fitness, Intelligence/Reason, and Wisdom/Intuition determine a psionicist’s PSP total. Wild talent checks use the same set of scores.

Wisdom/Willpower determines a character’s base MAC, and Intelligence/Reason determines a character’s MAC modifier.

Buying Wild Talents: A character can purchase a wild talent as a trait for 9 character points. The character need not make a wild talent check, but must roll randomly to determine what the wild talent is (see Skills & Powers, page 156). Note that a character could make a normal wild talent check and use a character point to reroll if the check fails.

Does a scarab of protection allow saving throws against spells such as dispel magic and Mordenkainen’s disjunction? If a character has one of the rare scarabs of protection +2, how do you calculate the saving throw bonus against effects that normally allow no saving throws? For example, a character has a scarab of protection +2, a ring of protection +2, and a cloak of protection +2. What is the character’s saving throw number against a magic missile spell?

A scarab of protection sometimes allows a saving throw against dispel magic and similar spells, depending on how the spell is used. If a the dispel is cast directly on the scarab bearer or his items, the wearer has a saving throw and the scarab’s bonus applies. (Technically, the items gets the saving throw, but its exactly the same as the wearer’s, see the dispel magic spell description). If a spell such as dispel magic, Mordenkainen’s disjunction, or continual darkness is cast on the area containing the scarab wearer, the wearer gains no saving throw because the spell is not directed at him. The scarab wearer might find it inconvenient — or even fatal — to have spells affecting him dispelled or disjoined, but that’s just a consequence of the spell being there. The situation is similar to what happens when a magic-resistant creature finds itself in one of these spell’s areas of effect, there is no magic resistance roll because the spell in question is not working directly against the creature.

According to the scarab of protection description, when the wearer is subjected to a spell attack that allows no saving throw, such as magic missile, the wearer gains a saving throw of 20 plus any other magical saving throw bonuses he might have; the character in your example would get a saving throw of 16 against the magic missile spell no matter what kind of scarab he was wearing. I know of some referees who rule that the base saving throw of 20 accounts for the scarab’s first plus (and who give a base saving throw of 19 to characters wearing a scarab of protection +2). This seems a reasonable house rule to me.

My group has found a lich’s phylactery. The problem is we have not found the lich yet. Will we destroy the lich if we destroy the phylactery? The rules say that if you destroy the lich and the phylactery the lich is forever gone. What happen if we destroy the phylactery and not the lich?

A lich uses its phylactery as a bolt hole for its spirit; if it’s body is destroyed, it survives by fleeing to the phylactery, and from there it can inhabit a new body (Van Richten’s Guide to the Lich explores the process in some detail). If someone destroys the phylactery without destroying the lich first, the lich is deprived of its bolt hole, but remains otherwise unharmed (though it probably gets pretty angry). Note that lich phylacteries usually aren’t just left lying around, so what your party has might not be the real thing. It might also contain a lich’s spirit that’s just biding its time until it can seize control of a player character.

Skip Williams recently appeared as gaming guest at the Wizard’s Challenge Convention in Regina, Saskatchewan where he answered this month’s questions in person.
THE GATE

Through me the road to the city of desolation,
Through me the road to sorrow's dungeon,
Through me the road among the lost creation.

Justice moved my great maker: God Eternal
Wrought me: The Power, and the unsearchable
High wisdom, and the Prime Love Supernal.

Nothing ere I was made to be save things eternae, and eternae abide;
Abandon all hope, all ye that enter here.

Don Dante—Inferno III:1-9

In the Hollows of the Abyss, the great Lords make war. Vast armies clash endlessly over the tortured landscape battling for power and that most precious commodity, souls. Striding like giants among the Hordes, mighty Archfiends and their terrible Lieutenants reap great ruin, slaughtering their foes over and over again, in bloody practice to storm the Heights from which they had Fallen so long ago...

Based on Dante Alighieri’s classic work, Inferno is a fast-paced fantasy miniatures game. It features an elegantly simple rules system that is easy to learn, but with plenty of tactical flexibility. Players take the roles of the Generals of the Abyss, commanding armies composed of Archfiends, Lieutenants and Hordes. Each unit has a unique range of abilities, and armies can be tailored to a player’s tastes by choosing the appropriate combination of forces. A wide range of figures are available, in 3 size ranges: Archfiends (55-65mm), Lieutenants (25-35mm), and Hordes (“stands” of 7mm figures).

The basic game comes as a boxed set, and contains 2 map boards (each 17x23”), rule book, 2 dice, plastic bases, full colour counters and stand-ups, as well as full colour terrain features and templates. As an additional bonus, the Tome of the Abyss is also included (featuring additional artwork and background). MSRP: $29.95

AVAILABLE IN JULY, 1996 AD.

Come check out our booths at GEN CON® Game Fair ’96

* TSR, Inc.
An interview with Lou Prosperi, the Network Guest of Honor at the 1996 GEN CON® Game Fair

Game fans frequently ask Lou Prosperi how to break into the industry — how to take that first step from role-playing devotee to author, editor, or artist. He gives them all the same answer — be professional, be persistent, and don’t expect to start at the top of the game designer pyramid.

Prosperi’s advice is sound. By following it, he rose from stocking shelves in Mayfair Game’s warehouse to being the Earthdawn Line Developer for the FASA Corporation, responsible for a myriad of products and a stable of freelancers. He still relies on his warehouse experience, however, as he has a game collection filled with games. My comic book collection is at my parent’s house.

Prosperi is the ROLE PLAYING GAME ASSOCIATION® Network’s guest of honor at the upcoming GEN CON® Game Fair, scheduled for August 8-11 at the Mecca Center in Milwaukee. He will be on hand to participate in seminars, workshops, and to host a special tournament for the Network where player slots will be auctioned for charity.

“Earthdawn is a role-playing game of high fantasy,” says Prosperi, who is the author of numerous Earthdawn products — including a short story in the Talisman Earthdawn anthology. “It takes a number of the traditional elements of fantasy, but it deals with them in a new way. For instance, it sometimes seems impossible there’d be all these dungeons out in the wilderness. In Earthdawn, we came up with an explanation. We had an event called The Scourge, where creatures from astral space came and ravaged the planet for 400 years. They lived in underground cities — dungeons. When they left, the world’s eight different races — elves, dwarves, humans, orcs, trolls, t’skrang, windlings, and obsidmen — started exploring the ruins.

This GEN CON Game Fair marks the second year for the Threads of Legend campaign. Following an approach similar to the Networks LIVING CIV™ program, participants play their own characters in sanctioned tournaments.

“I review and approve the tournaments for Threads of Legend,” Prosperi said. “In fact, I approve all the RPGA® Network tournaments for FASA games. And I act as sort of a liaison between the Network and Drew Caldwell, who runs Threads of Legend. My involvement isn’t heavy, but I do stay involved. I think the tournament campaign’s a wonderful idea.” He says the players think so, too. He receives e-mail feedback after conventions at which Threads of Legend runs, and nearly all of it is positive. “I’ve heard very few negative comments, and those were about scenario balance. I think you’d hear that regardless. I just wish I could play in it. I wish I had the time and the freedom to participate in it.”

Prosperi has been a member of the RPGA Network since 1989. “I joined because of the wide variety of games the Network offers at the GEN CON Game Fair. If you’re a Network member you can get into lots of different games — and they’re good games.” He said the Network is important to the industry, and that programs like Threads of Legend and Virtual Seattle, the Shadowrun Tournament setting, are helping to broaden its scope. Coverage of different topics and games in the Networks POLYHEDRON Newszine is also a plus. Prosperi compiled an article to appear in the Newszine sometime in the next several months. “It’s in the World Under Construction column,” he explained. “It’s about changes to Shadowrun. I would like to do something for Earthdawn, too. Maybe about Prelude to War, an upcoming Earthdawn product — without giving everything away.”

Prosperi hinted that there are changes in store for the line. “The Earthdawn universe groundwork has been established. Now we’re going to shake it up a little bit. Important things will happen to important people. It’s kind of exciting to coordinate and orchestrate the changes. And we’re really going to get player characters involved in events that will change the universe. In a lot of the preestablished universes, a lot of the big changes occur in novels. The characters rarely get to play a pivotal part. But what we’re planning is a product that describes large-scale events. What the characters do will help determine what happens with their world.”

Prosperi thinks the players will enjoy getting their characters more involved in the world. He understands players because he’s one of them. He games practically every week, whether it’s Earthdawn, Warhammer 40K, or Feng Shui: the Shadowfist role-playing game.

He says he’s happy in the game industry. “It’s become a job at one level. But my job involves games.” He considers it more fun and rewarding that what he used to do for a living.

“I worked for the Harvard University Library System at a place called the Harvard Depository.” Harvard owned a large climate-control warehouse for books and other materials, and Prosperi worked there bar-coding items and logging them in a computer database — while he continued to pester game companies for work. “It was a pretty intense job. Libraries in the system would call with their orders every day. I did troubleshooting stuff, lifting and grunt work, too. I thought it was a fun job, but it wasn’t a career.”
Prior to that, Prosperi attended the University of Lowell in Massachusetts. "I majored in music composition. I got into music because I was a drummer from elementary school to high school, and when I left high school, music was the only thing I could think of pursuing. But in college I learned that you shouldn’t go to college because you think you’re supposed to. You should go because you have something you want to do." It was during college that Prosperi discovered what he truly wanted to pursue. That’s where he developed a taste for gaming — spurred by his love of comic books.

"I first got into gaming in 1986. Wow. Ten years. The time has gone real fast," Prosperi said, adding he was 22 at the time. "I was big into comic books years ago, particularly DC Comics, and the DC Heroes game caught my attention. I bought it and ended up being the game master. It was rough at first. The first couple of games I ran, I tried to keep within the context of the comic books, but my players coerced me to go farther." He recalls that he had to expand the world and let the players go beyond the plotlines running in the numerous DC books. "I bought all the supplements that came out with the game. And then I noticed there were different authors’ names on all of them. That intrigued me. So I got the number to Mayfair Games, called, and found out the supplements were mostly written by freelance authors."

Prosperi decided he wanted to be one of those authors, too. "I put together a couple of proposals — that got rejected. Between proposals I took a trip to the Chicago area to visit relatives. One day I went to the Mayfair Office." He quickly added that he called ahead to be polite. "I talked to a couple of the editors and designers, and that lead me into doing some playtesting for them. I also used to contribute to a one-page newsletter for them, called the Daily Planet — for free. I did it just to get my name known, and it ended up as ads in places like Dragon® Magazine."

After building up playtesting credits, Prosperi found that his contacts in the game industry mushroomed. "I got to know Darwin Bromley (Mayfair’s president) pretty well, and a couple of other people. They invited me to help them with the International Superman Expo in Ohio in 1988. I ran demos and such for them. Then they asked I was interested in going to the Gen Con Game Fair to run demos." Prosperi said he quickly agreed.

"That was my first Game Fair — in 1988. It was quite an eyeopening experience to see the rest of the industry."

Shortly after that, he discovered Mayfair Games had an opening its warehousing department. He applied, and he started work two months after the Game Fair. "I was the warehouse manager. I was the shipping person, and I managed the inventory. I still kept involved in playtesting, and I started to write games a little later."

After a year Prosperi left Mayfair Games. Relying on his experience with playtesting, he contacted West End Games, and soon after he was playtesting for the Torg® system. "At the Gen Con Game Fair in 1990 I was asked to write a short adventure for Torg. That was the first real thing I wrote, and I got it done early so they offered me a second piece."

Prosperi’s West End Games credits include a section of Pixaud’s Practical Grimoire, a book of spells for the Torg magic system. His first major project was The Storm Knight’s Guide to the Possibility Wars, a player’s book about creating backgrounds for characters. And he had some material published in Wanted by Cracken for the Star Wars® game.

"Later I designed a section of TSR’s Dark Sun® Monstrous Compendium® tome. That was in 1991. And then I also did a couple of adventures in a book called Treasures of Greyhawk. I was doing all of this at night, after work. It was pretty tough," he recalls. "I started to get into playtesting for Earthdawn at about the same time I landed the project A Killing Glare, a Shadowrun adventure. When I was contacting Tom Dowd at FASA about the specifics of the Shadowrun product, he mentioned an Earthdawn opening. I put together a resume, sent it to then-president Sam Lewis, and in October, 1992, I flew out to Chicago for an interview."

Two months later he was named the Earthdawn Line Developer.

The position involves coordinating art, editorial, and marketing for the Earthdawn product line, planning what types of products to put on the schedule, and creating outlines for those products for freelance writers. When the freelance writers submit a finished manuscript, Prosperi reviews it to make sure it fits the Earthdawn storyline and that the “game mechanics” work.

"In the first year or two I found myself writing 20 to 30 percent of any product. That’s because sometimes we wanted to make the products bigger than we initially planned. Sometimes the author didn’t hit everything we wanted covered. And sometimes we decided that we needed to add stuff — mostly because we were still establishing the game." Now Prosperi finds himself doing little such supplemental writing — though he has many other tasks to keep him busy.

"I also represent the company at conventions around the country by running seminars and game demos. I go to the Gen Con Game Fair — of course. I occasionally go to Origins. This year I went to the Winter Fantasy™ Convention, too."

Prosperi considers the Game Fair pleasurable and painful. "It’s this four-day extravaganza I look forward to with anticipation and dread. I started worrying about this Game Fair in January. I coordinate all the events FASA sponsors. I handle the seminars, the paperwork, scheduling — as well as all the booth demos. So once a week from January on I spend half a day on the Game Fair in some..."
The War is On!

Hellbound: The Blood War

TSR2621

This boxed set for Planescape™ features a colossal adventure plunging heroes into the Blood War, the millennia-old conflict between the fiends of the Lower Planes!

Look for Hellbound at the fine Wargames West-sponsored stores below. Also releasing in July from TSR are the I, Tyrant (TSR9521) accessory and the Eye of Pain (TSR9522) adventure, Draconomicon™ booster packs for Spellfire® (TSR1156), and a new Volo’s Guide, this one for the Dalelands (TSR9524).

---

Wargames West Distribution -- Sponsored Stores:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Store Name</th>
<th>City</th>
<th>State</th>
<th>Phone</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hobbycraft, Inc.</td>
<td>Anchorage</td>
<td>AK</td>
<td>907-349-5815</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Little Shop of Magic</td>
<td>Flagstaff</td>
<td>AZ</td>
<td>520-774-3546</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roaming Panther Too</td>
<td>Glendale</td>
<td>AZ</td>
<td>602-547-0239</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roaming Panther</td>
<td>Mesa</td>
<td>AZ</td>
<td>602-820-2083</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ace Computers &amp; Games</td>
<td>Santa Rosa</td>
<td>CA</td>
<td>707-575-5797</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Name of the Game</td>
<td>Saugus</td>
<td>CA</td>
<td>805-254-8932</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bard’s Tale</td>
<td>Ft. Walton</td>
<td>FL</td>
<td>904-563-8810</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Patch Craft Hobbies</td>
<td>Sioux City</td>
<td>IA</td>
<td>712-258-1010</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wyrd Raven</td>
<td>Manhattan</td>
<td>KS</td>
<td>913-539-1853</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dragon’s Lair</td>
<td>W. Springfield</td>
<td>MA</td>
<td>413-731-7237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gaming Realm</td>
<td>Frederick</td>
<td>MD</td>
<td>301-662-4263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gaming Realm</td>
<td>Hagerstown</td>
<td>MD</td>
<td>301-662-4263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rogers</td>
<td>Saginaw</td>
<td>MI</td>
<td>517-790-0080</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pack Shack</td>
<td>Southgate</td>
<td>MI</td>
<td>313-284-0550</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hobby House</td>
<td>Westland</td>
<td>MI</td>
<td>313-425-9720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Games, Crafts, &amp; Hobbies</td>
<td>Overland</td>
<td>MO</td>
<td>314-423-2199</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diversions</td>
<td>Biloxi</td>
<td>MS</td>
<td>601-374-6632</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wargames West on Central</td>
<td>Albuquerque</td>
<td>NM</td>
<td>505-265-6100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>My Book Store</td>
<td>Las Cruces</td>
<td>NM</td>
<td>505-524-8471</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gameco</td>
<td>Santa Fe</td>
<td>NM</td>
<td>505-983-6037</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asgaard Games</td>
<td>Las Vegas</td>
<td>NV</td>
<td>702-368-3389</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Imagination United.</td>
<td>Las Vegas</td>
<td>NV</td>
<td>702-649-3311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bayshore Hobbies</td>
<td>Bayshore</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>516-568-8547</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adventures &amp; Hobbies</td>
<td>Rochester</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>716-342-1970</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crazy Egor’s</td>
<td>Rochester</td>
<td>NY</td>
<td>716-427-2190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hobby Shop</td>
<td>Oklahoma City</td>
<td>OK</td>
<td>405-634-0221</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trump’s Hobby</td>
<td>Corvallis</td>
<td>OR</td>
<td>503-753-7540</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ye Oldie Hobby Shoppe</td>
<td>Altadena</td>
<td>CA</td>
<td>818-944-0249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alternate Realities</td>
<td>Greenville</td>
<td>RI</td>
<td>401-232-3110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Texas Game Co.</td>
<td>Allen</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>214-390-9467</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joe’s Other Worlds</td>
<td>El Paso</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>915-772-8208</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sunrise Games &amp; Comics</td>
<td>El Paso</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>915-757-0700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gamesmasters Unldt.</td>
<td>Clearlake</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>713-286-9282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gamesmasters Unldt.</td>
<td>Houston</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>800-TEX-GAME</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mad Hatter’s</td>
<td>Lubbock</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>806-763-4054</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Specialties</td>
<td>San Angelo</td>
<td>TX</td>
<td>915-947-5434</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eagle Games</td>
<td>Bellingham</td>
<td>WA</td>
<td>360-671-1913</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Golden Age Collectables</td>
<td>Seattle</td>
<td>WA</td>
<td>206-622-9799</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake Country Comics</td>
<td>Oconomowoc</td>
<td>WI</td>
<td>414-569-6165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Gateway</td>
<td>Morgantown</td>
<td>WV</td>
<td>304-292-3045</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Storyteller Entertainment</td>
<td>Gillette</td>
<td>WY</td>
<td>307-682-2855</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

To get a free 136-page catalog of games and accessories, write to: PO BOX 9496, ALBUQUERQUE NM 87119-9496, or call 1-800-SOS-GAME!
10-523 BIRTHRIGHT™ Abominations Boxed Set $25.95
This boxed set heralds the beginning of Ral Partha’s support for TSR’s newest campaign setting. Contains some of the main Awnshegh including: Rhoshba Manslayer, Siren, Hag of Muden, Gorgon, White Witch, Vampire, Raven, Magian, and Manticore.

11-750 The Spider $6.75
11-751 Lamia $4.50
11-753 Banshegh $4.25
(Justina & Banshegh)

IT’S GOOD TO BE THE KING!
BUT NOT ALL WHO RULE ARE...

TO ORDER OUR PHOTO CATALOG
CALL TOLL FREE IN THE USA OR CANADA, MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY, 8:30 TO 5:00 EST, 1-800-543-0272 OR SEND $4.00 TO:
RAL PARThA ENTERPRISES, INC.
5938 CARTHAGE COURT
CINCINNATI, OH 45212-1197
PHONE: (513) 631-7335 FAX: (513) 631-0028
Email: rparth19@mall.eos.net Website: http://www.ralparth.com
RAL PARThA MINIATURES ARE ALSO AVAILABLE FROM THESE LICENSED MANUFACTURERS:
UNITED KINGDOM: MINIFIGS- 1/5 GRAHAM ROAD, SOUTHAMPTON, ENGLAND, SO2 4AY
FRANCE: JEUX DESCARTES- 1 RUE DU COLONEL PIERRE AVIA, PARIS CEDEX 15, 75003 FRANCE

ADVANCED DUNGEONS & DRAGONS is a registered trademark owned by TSR, Inc. The TSR Logo and BIRTHRIGHT are trademarks owned by TSR, Inc.
©1996 TSR, Inc. All rights reserved. Printed in the U.S.A.

PLASTICS?!?
In order to get across the ‘Spectral Transparency’ exhibited by the 11-753 Banshegh in her nocturnal form, Ral Partha is releasing this figure in blue-grey transparent resin. In addition, we are re-releasing our TSR Elementals in resin colored to match their corresponding element.

Look ma, No Painting!

11-527P $4.95
Elementals of Fire and Earth

11-528P $4.95
Elementals of Air and Water
The battle for good or evil rages on in Esfah. Nature’s fury clashes with the foul corruption of Death, and no one knows who will win this bitter war. But Nature has a new trick: The Feral!

Kicker Pack #4 introduces the newest good race in the DRAGON DICE game. The Feral are savage man-beasts, with an awesome special ability and powerful new spells. Here is an introduction to the untamed world of the Feral and some ideas for unleashing them in battle.

Flexible and Fearsome

The Feral follow the same basic rules as do other races in the DRAGON DICE game, but their special ability makes them unique and formidable. They are so strongly tied to Nature (and thus the forces of life and goodness) that new Feral are constantly created. Because Feral young mature more quickly than the children of other races, more of their kind are produced naturally.

In game terms, this means that at the start of a player’s turn, every terrain occupied by one of his armies that contains at least one Feral unit attracts a one-health Feral unit from the dead unit area. (If no one-health units are available, no generation occurs.) This ability works extremely well in either all one-health Feral armies or armies with a large percentage of one-health units. Whenever an army containing Feral is injured in an attack, discard a common Feral unit first. At the start of your next turn, you’ll get it back.

This special ability means that the Feral are unlikely to be destroyed outright. While this alone makes them a valuable addition to any army, the Feral are also well rounded in their action abilities. Unlike some races, who have feast or famine when rolling (like the Lava Elves), the Feral have their abilities spread evenly across the dice. When you roll an army of Feral melee troops (called Hunters and Stalkers, by the way), you can count on getting about the same number of melee hits, saves, and moves each time. For players who like to play by statistical odds rather than chance, this is a big advantage. The Feral makes a good, solid race to play against almost any opponent.

Nature’s Magicians

Favored children of Nature, the Feral are also powerful spellcasters. Their mix of blue (air) and gold (earth) gives them a great selection of basic spells — including stoneskin (a fine defensive spell) as well as hailstorm and lightning strike (two of the most powerful offensive spells yet introduced to the game). Moreover, a Feral magician with enough points of magic can virtually guarantee an army a successful maneuver by using either transmute rock to mud or windwalk.

Like other recently introduced new races, the Feral have several spells that only they can use. Hide allows their owner to hide a one-health unit in the target army until the end of his next turn. Hidden units can’t be affected by...
spells until the spell ends. (The downside is that they also can’t make any rolls.)

Savage causes a one-health unit of the target army (your choice) to make a melee attack against its own forces. It’s just the thing to throw at those annoying Goblin leopard riders or Undead that have been plaguing you.

Even more powerful is the gold backlash spell, which targets one terrain. If an army at that terrain casts magic, that army must then save against an amount of damage equal to the number of magic points it spent. What an incentive for your opponent finally to move the terrain die off of magic!

Beastly New Powers

The Feral have several special action icons unique to their race. These icons allow you to specialize your Feral army, helping you focus on melee, missile, or magic as you desire. The new special action icons are as follows:

- Double Strike: During melee, double strike counts as three or four normal hits (depending on the die) and allows the Feral to roll again, counting the new result as well. There’s no limit on the number of melee hits that can be generated in this way. (Of course, that would be pretty spectacular rolling!)

- Gore: Found only on the rhino-folk, gore counts as two hits on a single target during melee. The unit gets to save, but if it’s killed, it is immediately buried as well. With this power, you can slowly remove an opponent’s one- and two-health units from the game completely.

- Hug: If an army’s got a lot of bear-folk in it, look out! During melee, the hug counts as four hits on a single target. The unit doesn’t get to save, but it does get to strike back before it’s removed. (The downside is that the bear-folk doesn’t get to roll any saves against this damage.) Between gore and hug, a Feral army quickly shreds its opponent.

- Trumpet: When rolling for melee hits or save, trumpet rallies all Feral at the terrain and doubles their results. The icon’s only found on the elephant-folk, but it’s a tremendous boost.

In addition to these new special action icons, the Feral have a good mix of the old. They have a dispel ability, which negates all spells targeting a target or army; cantrip, which gives them immediate points of magic; and rend, which causes three points of damage and allows the die to be rerolled.

Tactics of the Feral

The Feral are an excellent, all-around race. They don’t have any special weaknesses (like the Undead, which can’t charge), and they make good partners in any multiracial army. Here are some strategies to try when using the Feral.

- Multiply and Conquer: Large armies composed of one-health Feral units are best when you have an army at every terrain in the game. It will take several turns of jumping in and out of reserve to achieve this position, but when you’re done you’ll be able to recruit a new Feral at every terrain. In a four-player game, this is five health-worth of Feral each turn for free. It will take a tremendous, combined effort on the part of your opponents to wipe you out.

- Go to the Enemy: The Feral’s special ability isn’t tied to one terrain, and they are good at just about everything. They are one of the few races that can take the fight to any terrain and thrive. They can even swap magic fire with the Coral Elves since the Feral also “see” blue magic.

Maneuver Early and Often: The Feral are a quick race, good at maneuvering. You can’t keep up with the Dwarves or Goblins in their home terrains, but you can with anyone else. Thus, you should be able to own the terrain die, wherever you are. Up against archers? Move the terrain quickly up to melee and crush them or move it back down to magic and lightning strike your opponent back into the Stone Age. Melee guerillas? Jump the die up to the eighth face and start charging them, or drop it back to missile range and feather them with arrows.

- When All Else Fails, Charge! Use your magicians to cast stoneskin spells on one of your armies. Once they’re pumped up enough, have them charge an opposing army. The resulting damage should mash them into the ground while your own forces will escape relatively unscathed.

- Fear Black Magic: Don’t stand by while the death magicians bury your dead. Being able to bring new Feral into the game each turn is the race’s main strength. Protect them. Go after the black magic casters whenever possible. And after they’re dead, cast dust to dust on them to ensure that they don’t come back. Anything that buries dice is a threat to you. Take that threat seriously.

Dori Hein’s office at TSR is considered a “shrine to roadkill” for its many animal artifacts; Bill Olmesdahl closely resembles a shaved ape. It’s only natural that these two worked on the Feral.
Villains Unlimited

One look will tell you that this book is something special. Page after page of unique and interesting villains, anti-heroes, and secret organizations.

No knock-off "generic" characters in this book! Each and every character is distinct and different, with his own origin, history, personality, powers, and point of view. Homicidal maniacs, would-be world conquerors, speed demons, supernatural monsters, superhuman mutants, aliens, cyborgs, robots, wizards, and much more. All major villains are illustrated by Kevin Long, Kevin Siembieda and/or Mike Gustovich.

Plus adventures and adventure ideas, One look at this giant 224 page sourcebook will tell you why it took a few extra months to complete — it's got everything!

Highlights Include:
- Over 80 villains and a dozen heroes/anti-heroes.
- Secret villainous organizations like the Fabricators and Dark Tribunal; eight in all.
- How to design your own super organizations.
- S.C.R.E.T.: Superbeing Control, Retrieval, and Elimination Teams — government agencies developed to counter the threat of "super humans."
- 18 significant, new, super abilities, many of which have sub-powers within that particular ability. Powers like bio-ghost, alter metabolism, multiple lives and negate super powers.
- New robots, weapons, gimmicks, equipment and more.
- Art by Long, Siembieda, and Gustovich. Written by Long and Siembieda.
- For Heroes Unlimited™ and compatible with Ninjas & Superspies™ Beyond the Supernatural™, Rifts™, and the entire Palladium Megaverse™.
- 224 pages, $20.95 plus $2.00 for postage and handling.

Aliens Unlimited™

For Heroes Unlimited™ & Rifts®

This giant sourcebook is packed with aliens, mutants, cyborgs, power armor, robots, weapons and superbeings from across the universe. Suitable for contemporary superhero adventures or cosmic adventure.

Highlights Include:
- New superpowers and magic spells.
- Expanded alien character generation tables.
- 84 alien player character races and over a hundred aliens and monsters in all. Complete with background descriptions, powers and creation stats.
- High-tech weapons, robots, power armor and equipment.
- Secret Organizations, alien bounty hunters, government agencies, and an underground that hides and protects extraterrestrial visitors.
- The evil Atorian Empire and other villains.
- All artwork and designs by Wayne Breaux.
- Written by Wayne Breaux Jr. and Kevin Siembieda.
- Includes Rifts® and Rifts® Phase World™ conversion notes and suggestions throughout.
- 192 pages, $20.95 plus $2.00 for postage and handling.

Ninjas & Superspies™

Forty-one (41) forms of martial arts combat as you have never seen them in any other role-playing game.

Oriental combat skills accurately portrayed, each with its own unique fighting style, methods of attack and defense presented on an epic scale. Complete with mystical, superhuman powers as Oriental legend suggests.

But that's not all! The superspy section includes spies of all kinds, cyber agents, gadgeteers, secret organizations, secret identities, gimmick weapons and clothing, cyber-disguises, cybernetic implants, and more. Plus don't miss Mystic China, an action packed sourcebook of ancient magic and mystery.

Completely compatible with Heroes Unlimited™, Villains Unlimited™, Ninja Turtles®, Rifts®, and the entire Palladium Megaverse! Written by Erick Wujcik — 176 pages, $16.95 plus $1.50 for postage and handling.

Available at hobby shops
and comic stores everywhere!

Copyright © 1995 Kevin Siembieda

and comic stores everywhere!
Knights of the Dinner Table™ © Jolly R. Blackburn 1995 • Send story ideas to JollyRB@aol.com or KODT, 8780 19th St., #181, Alta Loma, CA 91701
LOUI'S BEEN ARRESTED FOR PICKING POCKETS AGAIN. AGAIN? YOU'VE GOT TO BE KIDDING.

NOPE, THEY TOOK HER DOWN TO THE STATION AN HOUR AGO. GOSH, THIS IS WHAT HER FIFTH ARREST THIS MONTH.

I WONDER WHAT SHE'LL GET THIS TIME? TEN... TWENT... THIRTY GOLD COINS, THE JUDGE'S WIG, FOUR GUARD HELMETS, SIX WATCHES, ONE POLICE RADIO...

"...I HATE TO SEE AN ADVENTURE END... BUT IT'S ALWAYS GOOD TO GET BACK HOME SAFE AND SOUND..."
In 1983 Nova introduced Lost Worlds™. The game quickly became a fan-favorite with its simple design, innovative game system and quality artwork. Lost Worlds™ was the first game to accurately simulate one-on-one combat with various fantasy characters.

"With all-new characters and collectible cards, these...are not just for role-players but anyone who loves a head-to-head clash of wits."

-Games Magazine

In 1996 Chessex Manufacturing does it again! Now with all-new characters and new Fantasy Cards, The Original Dueling Game™ is back with a vengeance! Both new and old fans will get a real kick out of what the new Lost Worlds™ characters can do.

Get Lost in the Excitement™

New Lost Worlds™ characters are available now at finer gaming stores everywhere.

The Original Dueling Game™ and Get Lost in the Excitement™ are trademarks of Chessex Manufacturing. Lost Worlds™ is a trademark of Alfred Leonard and used under exclusive license by Chessex Manufacturing.
A powerful tale of myth and magic
—the start of a magnificent new trilogy in the Renshai series

From the bestselling author of The Last of the Renshai trilogy

BEYOND RAGNAROK
The Renshai Chronicles: Volume One
Mickey Zucker Reichert

Nearly three hundred years have passed since Ragnarok, and humankind faces a terrifying new challenge. With the impending death of the king, will the delicate balance between Law and Chaos be shattered forever?

“Very strong... an excellent read.”
—Locus on The Last of the Renshai trilogy
WHERE ARE THOSE THINGS? I’VE SEARCHED THE CITY TWICE ALREADY...

I SHALL SEE TO IT THAT RANDAN’S MERCY COMFORTS THEIR SOULS...

AHH... THIS WILL LOOK GOOD IN MY MEMOIRS...

AH, WELL. AT LEAST PLAGUES ARE SELL WELL. ENOUGH TO KEEP US COMFORTABLE ON THE ROAD SOUTH?

I DON’T SUPPOSE THIS PLACE WILL LOOK ANY MORE APPEALING DURING MY THIRD TOUR...

NOW GO AND FETCH A BAND OF JUSTICE SEEKERS. HAVE THEM MEET ME AT THE MAIN GATE.

BROTHER JARL, THE HEALERS, INQUISITOR RIDE...

GOOD NERS MAY YET LIVE.

THOSE HEATHEN THIEVES AND MURDERERS HAVE GONE TOO FAR THIS TIME!

OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS HAS DRIVEN THESE VERMIN FROM THE STREETS AT LAST... BUT NOW THEY STRIKE FROM THEIR GUILD HALLS LIKE VIPERS! WEE...

MY POWERS ARE TOO WEAK TO SAVE YOU! YOU MUST TELL ME WHO VIOLATED OUR TEMPLE!

IT—AH—AH—AH—AH—
I wish I warned Floyd again to keep his bracelets and amulet well hidden...

Look, this would go much faster if we didn't move!

They could get him in trouble!

We blunted every pick in the hill, and those things still won't loosen! So, we need to be more... direct.

Hey! Now!

Don't be afraid, boy. I lost my right hand years ago for picking a noble's pocket, and it's improved my life immensely!

Well, for starters, I make damn sure I don't get caught again!

And to think that I once considered my hands an asset...

Look! ...This ain't personal, laddy...

Pickin's been slight since that iron jawed Ranor started cracking down on us!

Y'can't get away wit' as much as pickin' a nose if cuttin' yer tail bashed in by a Justice Seeker!

'Sides, they may lay off soon, cause I just put a blade through the ribs o' their main man. The Archin' his people executed one o' our boys, just for filchin' a copper! Justice, Paul!

I gave 'em justice!

On second thought...

'Cause I just put a blade through the ribs o' their main man. The Archin' his people executed one o' our boys, just for filchin' a copper! Justice, Paul!

Trongir cut off his tend first!

His hammerin' is givin' me a migraine!
REMEMBER THE MURDERER. WE HUNT FOR HIS DARK HAIR AND A GREEN.

INQUISITOR, LOOK!

APPREHEND HIM, SEEKERS.

HARSHLY!

LET ME TAKE HIM FIRST, CARL!

YOU MEAN, WE FIGHT HIM ONE AT A TIME?

SURE! JUST LIKE WHEN WE WORKED FOR RENT-A-THIEF!

DIDN'T WE GET BEAT UP A LOT DOING THAT, ALONSE?

NAY, BUT NOW WE'VE GOT RANOA ON OUR SIDE!

ATTACKED!

OOK!
Anyone else for piñata practice?

Is he ready to confess?

I'm afraid not, Inquisitor Ruede.

In my haste, I may have snapped his neck.

Not to worry. I'll send for Izen. His powers can loosen the most lifeless of tongues!

Leave us be, you walking lobotomy. Naaa?

Or else!
What say we all chip in and buy TSR a thesaurus? Designer Kevin Hassall admits that a number of shaman types are already running around the various AD&D® worlds, including those described in The Complete Barbarian’s Handbook and The Complete Book of Humanoids. But since all the shamans are different, how come they’re all stuck with the same moniker? As a service to the gaming industry in general and TSR in particular, I hereby donate the following synonyms: Mysterian, Wraithrunner, Thaumaturge, Hexist, Spellbinder, and — my personal favorite — Spirit Tweezer.

As it happens, the name is the least interesting aspect of this otherwise inventive supplement, which rethinks and reworks the AD&D priest class. Unlike standard priests, who operate more or less independently, shamans operate in a rigid partnership with the spirit world. A shaman must establish and maintain an intimate bond with his spirit patrons; no spirits, no spells. Because spirits have minds of their own — some cajole and punish, others comfort and reward — the shaman occupies a peculiar place in the AD&D cast of characters; simply put, he’s half of a whole.

Specifically, Shaman introduces three new priest classes. The tribal shaman, a primitive religious functionary, serves as a conduit between his congregation and the spirit world. The solitary shaman is a self-sufficient recluse, rejecting the trappings of civilization for the simple comforts of the wilderness. The spiritualist, an outcast from a ravaged culture, is a grim vigilante who’s one part crusader, one part creep. All three are presented as character kits, replete with ability requirements, racial restrictions, and background notes. Statistically, they don’t vary much from standard priests; all shamans use eight-siders for Hit Dice and retain Wisdom as their prime requisite. Instead, they’re distinguished by their special benefits. A solitary shaman, for instance, can engage in a telepathic conversation with a spirit by merely sitting still for a few rounds. A tribal shaman can befriend suspicious spirits by furnishing them with a day’s worth of food and drink. The dream interpretation proficiency allows shamans to foretell the future; the trance proficiency enables them to tap the memories of dead tutors. Hassall’s astute role-playing tips enable new players to get an immediate handle on their PCs’ personalities; solitary shamans relish nature and avoid politics, spiritualists cultivate a... cold indifference to life and death ("People die every day. So what?").

Hassall has also come up with a new approach to spellcasting which players accustomed to the standard system may find both frustrating and liberating. Where a standard priest must pray for his spells, a shaman receives his spells as gifts from his spirits, a convenient arrangement as long as he and they remain on good terms. Unlike a standard priest, a shaman may cast each spell in his arsenal as often as he likes, providing he makes a successful Wisdom check after each casting; failure prevents him from casting the spell until he gets a full night’s sleep. But when a shaman adds a particular spell to his repertoire, he’s stuck with it; he can’t replace it with a different spell, nor can he learn a new spell until he advances in level and acquires a new slot. Further, just because a shaman has access to a particular spell doesn’t mean he can use it at will; a cranky spirit may decide to withhold a spell at a critical moment, leaving the shaman gesturing into empty air. And the new shaman spells, though imaginative, are fairly low-key. Samples: cleanse hearth (dispels spirits from a house or barn), protection from serpents (nonmagical snakes ignore the target), and bind guardian (affixes a protective spirit to particular site or object).

Overall, Hassall serves up with a clean, easy to assimilate set of rules, avoiding the temptation to ladle on a lot of extraneous glop; this is one of the few RPG supplements I understood completely the first time through. Occasionally, however, he skimps on details, resulting in maddening ambiguities. The converse spell allows the caster to ask questions of tree, bird, and stream spirits, who will “answer to the best of their abilities.” Great, but what exactly does your average stream know, anyway? Hassall doesn’t tell us. A solitary shaman loses one of his five senses when he reaches 8th level, a penalty associated with his character kit. But losing, say, the sense of sight has enormous consequences, while losing the sense of taste doesn’t seem like much of a hardship at all. Hassall neglects to explore the ramifications of any type of sensory loss.

Then there’s a good chunk of Shaman I can’t even discuss, at least not without giving away the books best surprise. And that’s too bad, because not only is the surprise pretty interesting, it’s also pretty outrageous. I’m referring to Chapter Five, where spirits are defined and their origins revealed. I like the idea of a big surprise (and I like the surprise itself). But this approach presents an aggravating logistical problem, namely, how do you keep this information out of the hands of the players? (It says in the introduction that “Shaman is designed to inspire players and DMs alike . . .”) Unless you want to wreck the concept, access to Shaman will have to be restricted to DMs and to players with enough self-control not to look past page 44.

Evaluation: More reflective and intellectual than standard priests, shamans are best suited for adventures stressing investigation and problem-solving. With spells like perfect perception and cleanse hearth, shamans aren’t much help in dungeon crawls, nor are they particularly effective on the battlefield: a shaman facing a horde of ogres is probably just a round or two away from joining the spirit world himself. But in the right campaign (light on violence, heavy on mysticism) and with the right players (thoughtful, seasoned, open-minded), Shaman can nudge AD&D in enticing new directions. And the interplay between the spirit world and the world of just plain folks is guaranteed to raise a few eyebrows; after all, these are spirits capable of inhabiting rocking chairs and (gulp) meat cleavers. Now if we could just do something about that name . . .

Arcane Companion

Rolemaster® game supplement
128-page softcover book
Iron Crown Enterprises, Inc. $18
Design: Todd McGovern and John Curtis
Editing: John W. Curtis III
Illustrations: Julie Baroh, Storn Cook, Dan Cruger, David Flora, Fredd Gorham, K.C. Lancaster, Wayne Reynolds, John Snyder, and Arnie Swekel
Cover: Angus McBride

If there’s a fantasy RPG more complicated than Rolemaster, I’ve never seen it. Saturated with charts and numbers, it’s for players who buy pocket calculators by the crate. Without question, Rolemaster is a design of impressive scope, but... well, let’s put it this way: If you’re the kind of guy who needs his fingers to do arithmetic, this ain’t your kind of game.

Arcane Companion, the latest addition to the Rolemaster system, builds on the concept of magic laid out in the Spell Law supplement back in the early ‘80s. Basically, Rolemaster sorts magical forces into three categories: Essence, Channeling, and Mentalism. Practitioners associated with each category have access to an array of related spells. Casting involves extensive die-rolling and chart-checking, simulating the effects of magic in mind-boggling detail. The Companion describes a super-powered version of standard magic, warning that it’s “beyond the scope of many spellcasters to comprehend” and at best, “difficult to learn.” Difficult to learn? Yikes! That’s like the dentist warning that you might feel “a little pressure” before he shoves a needle through the roof of your mouth.

But surprise, surprise. Turns out that Arcane Companion is not only comprehensive but entertaining, thanks to the designers’ efforts to infuse the facts and figures with vivid imagery. Here’s a typical passage, explaining how a caster manipulates the forces of arcane magic:

Magic is the river... The caster makes his body the dam, the generators, and the entire power grid... If the river rises, he must make the dam bigger and stronger, or drown... The power to create the dam comes from both the mind and body of the arcane spell user and therefore, if he becomes weary, the dam cracks.

Nice, huh? In just a few sentences, an abstract concept is communicated simply and elegantly. The books pretty much all like that: thoughtful text buttressed by sharp metaphors. And, like Shaman, it’s glop-free, making it the most readable entry in the Rolemaster line — that is, assuming you’re willing to overlook a bit of editorial laxity, such as the habitual substitution of “wierd” for “weird.” As long as we’re buying a thesaurus for TSR, what say we spring for a spell checker for Iron Crown?

The book opens with an engaging discussion of power sources, defined as pools of magical energy that wizards tap when casting spells. The gamemaster is encouraged to utilize as many of the sources as he likes, depending on the style and tone of his campaign. He might opt for Ley Lines, intangible ribbons of force that correspond to a planet’s magnetic field. Or he might employ Essence Flows, energy streams of extradimensional origin. I prefer Earthnodes, bubbles of force that rise from the planetary core on convection currents. Spells cast within the radius of an exposed node require only 75% of their normal point cost (a terrific bargain). But there’s a risk. Casters who persist in tapping powerful nodes may turn into compulsive users; in other words, they become tap addicts, physically averse when casting spells. The gamemaster is encouraged to decide whether changing lungs allows the caster to breathe in airless space as well as underwater, and if see invisible enables him to view invisible objects as well as invisible persons. Still, the list contains more wheat than chaff. Samples: animate mana (causes a power source to become sentient), death’s tale (the caster experiences a vision of the events surrounding the death of a particular individual), and rapid gravity shifts (bounces the victim around like a rubber ball).

Evaluation: I’d like to tell you that the Arcane Companion material can be eased into other RPGs with minimal fuss. But alas, it’s rock-soldly linked to the Rolemaster system; familiarity with previous products is mandatory, especially Rolemaster Standard Rules and Spell Law. Because mastery of the magic system is essential to enjoying Rolemaster, experienced players should welcome this ambitious expansion with open arms. And if you’re among those who’ve dismissed Rolemaster as not worth the effort, sneak a peak at Arcane Companion; it might tempt you to reconsider.

Magic: A Manual of Mystic Secrets

Earthdawn* game supplement
144-page softcover book
FASA Corporation $18

Design: Louis J. Prosperi, Steve Kenson, and Loren Coleman
Editing: Donna Ippolito
Illustrations: Janet Aulisio, Tom Baxa, Joel Biske, Kent Burles, John Dollar, Mike Nielsen, and R. K. Post
Cover: John Zeleznik

I can’t say I’m the world’s biggest Earthdawn fan. With its dwarves, dragons, and other fantasy archetypes — not to mention its polyhedral dice — Earthdawn always struck me as a throwback to earlier games. And the game mechanics still seem unnecessarily convoluted. But I admire — make that adore — the magic system, the most intelligent take on the mystic arts since the Runequest* game. Because magic permeates every facet of the setting, characters, and culture, Earthdawn achieves a degree of authenticity to which many fantasy RPGs aspire but few achieve. In short, Earthdawn magic feels real.

Unfortunately, the magic rules are just as demanding as the rest of the game. Ideas like spell matrices and warping, though brilliant in conception, are tough on slacker like me who aren’t motivated to delve into the nuances of magical theory; I just wanna toss some fireballs and be done with it. So Manual of Mystic Secrets, which clarifies the original rules, is as welcome as an unexpected check from the IRS.

The Manual begins with a look at the primary types of Barsaive magic: blood, thread, and spell. We get a rundown of the history and utility of each (spell magic is underrepresented, although it’s arguably the least interesting of the three) with care taken to integrate the information into Earthdawn’s rich, meticulous background. Thus, we learn of the importance of astral space to thread weavers, and the ties between blood initiates and the Great Library of Neh’r’esha. We learn that although blood magic exists in both Life and Evil forms, player characters can use only the former (a critical detail). And we learn that blood oaths may involve no more than two characters at the same time; a PC wishing to swear an oath to three dwarves must complete the ceremony three times. Role-playing tips abound. Blood magically, for example, are pariahs, victims of their association with Scourge. The color of a thread denotes the nature of the caster (a green thread indicates a reptilian magician). As his last act before he bites the dust, a dying magician can place a curse on his enemies. The original Earthdawn rule-
The Manual also adds a bundle of easy-on-the-brain options, enabling old-timers and newcomers alike to experiment with customized mages. The multi-discipline rules allow casters to combine the effects of two or more Disciplines — say, nethermancy and illusion — into a single spell. The half-magic system provides guidelines for translating a wizard’s practical skills, such as geology and gardening, into spell-like effects. Would-be game inventors can check out the Spell Design chapter; the resulting incantations work surprisingly well.

Perhaps the most useful new concept is the knack, defined as a specialized variant of an existing spell. With guidance from the gamemaster, players are encouraged to concoct unique knacks for their characters. Just about any knack is acceptable, providing it arises from a talent the PC already has. For instance, a PC with the Abate Curse talent might acquire a knack for determining if an item is cursed without having to touch it. A PC with the Melee Weapons knack might come up with a knack that makes his weapons scream when they strike. Most of the Manual’s new spells are presented in the form of knacks, and they’re all pretty good. Samples: backbiter (enables an arrow to ricochet so that it hits a victim from behind), gaping wound (makes a wound appear to be far worse than it actually is) and spell stacking (allows a mage to cast a number of spells simultaneously at the same target).

Not every new concept passes muster. The section on creating magical objects is comprehensive but confusing; I read it three times and I’m still not sure how to make a decent thread item. Astral space doesn’t amount to much; when it comes to combat and movement, astral space isn’t all that much different from the physical world. And compared to its counterpart in the PLANESCAPE™ setting, Earthdawn’s tour of the elemental planes is about as exciting as a wheelchair race at a rest home.

Evaluation: Two caveats: First, you can’t use the Manual of Mystic Secrets by itself; you also need the Earthdawn Companion. Second, if you’re looking for material to adapt to other games, you won’t find much here; Earthdawn magic exists in its own quirky little world, and it doesn’t travel well. That said, Barsaive veterans should consider this an essential purchase; the Manual of Mystic Secrets finds the holes in Earthdawn and fills them up.

Short and sweet

There’s something for everyone in this lavish guide to the Blood Wars card game. For slow-learners, there’s a step-by-step rehash of the rules, with in-depth discussions of such key concepts as Alignment and Fate. Advanced players can ponder the strategy tips and fool around with the customized decks (like Factols’ Revenge and Modrons ‘R’ Us). Best of all, the book features full-color reproductions of the complete set, boosters included, so collectors can drool over the Lady of Pain, the Floating Gods, and all the other ultra-rarities they’re never gonna own.

In DRAGON® Magazine issue #228, I brought to your attention an intriguing new small press RPG called the Fantasy Earth* game. In conjunction with the first supplement, The Book of Magic, Fantasy Earth provides a set of sound, thoughtful rules, adaptable to your setting of choice. But at $30, the entry fee is a little high. Now comes Essential Fantasy Earth, a compendium of the core rules from the original two volumes. It’s not a new edition exactly, but rather an alternative version with a simplified system and all the bells and whistles — spell lists, sample characters, an introductory scenario — necessary to get a campaign off the ground. Even in its streamlined form, the game requires a fair amount of number-crunching, which may discourage the mathematically challenged. But at this price, what’ve you got to lose? I mean, you can barely buy dinner for $9. (Information: Zody Games, One Kendall Sq. #178, P.O. Box 9171, Cambridge, MA 02139.)

Guildbook: Sundmen, by Beth Fischi. White Wolf Game Studio, $12.

The second entry in the Guildbook series for the Wraith: The Oblivion™ game describes a cult of ancient spooks steeped in the traditions of classical theater. But the cult’s idea of a Broadway play is shaping the psyche of an unwary sleeper into bizarre Dreamscapes, with nightmarish consequences for all concerned. Despite the overwrought narration ("...the Gods are ailing. We immortals have fallen. Inspiration is dying.") Sandmen delivers a crypt-full of chills. Consider, for instance, the dead-eyed sociopath who shows up at the foot of its victim's bed wearing "a necklace hung with a demon's fangs...the soiled tatters of a plague victim's robe..." For experienced Wraith - ers, this is role-playing at its most unnerving.

GURPS Celtic Myth, by Ken and Jo Walton Steve Jackson Games, $18.

A treatise on Celtic folklore isn't my idea of page-turner. The first half of this GURPS* game sourcebook, recounting the history and literature of the Celts, reads like a college text, expansive but a bit stuffy. However, Celtic Myth comes to life in part two, a provocative look at druidic magic featuring shapeshifter duels, enchanted beads called Snakestones, and "letter" spells derived from the Ogham alphabet. I'm not convinced a Celts campaign is worth the trouble, but incorporating the druidic material into another setting — say, GURPS Camelot or GURPS Imperial Rome — could be mighty interesting.

Between the Shadows, by Carlos J. Martijena-Carella with Kevin Siembieda. Palladium Books, $17

The first supplement for the Nightbane* game (previously known as Nightspawn) features a cluster of creepy settings. Groom Lake, a base of operations for the American Defense Agency, might be a front for extraterrestrials, a portal to the Astral Domain, or both. The Dreamstream, composed of the unconscious thoughts of all sentient beings, is home to Soul Leeches and Guilt Eaters. Adventurers on vacation might drop by Club Freak, a nightspot created by the Club Freak, a nightspot created by the Wightnight Press), has designed and edited nearly 50 products. The use of the name of any product other than TSR, Inc. Most product names are trademarks owned by the companies publishing those products. The use of the name of any product without mention of its trademark status should not be construed as a challenge to such status.

The first supplement for the Nightbane* game (previously known as Nightspawn) features a cluster of creepy settings. Groom Lake, a base of operations for the American Defense Agency, might be a front for extraterrestrials, a portal to the Astral Domain, or both. The Dreamstream, composed of the unconscious thoughts of all sentient beings, is home to Soul Leeches and Guilt Eaters. Adventurers on vacation might drop by Club Freak, a nightspot created by the Club Freak, a nightspot created by the Wightnight Press), has designed and edited nearly 50 products. The use of the name of any product other than TSR, Inc. Most product names are trademarks owned by the companies publishing those products. The use of the name of any product without mention of its trademark status should not be construed as a challenge to such status.

The first supplement for the Nightbane* game (previously known as Nightspawn) features a cluster of creepy settings. Groom Lake, a base of operations for the American Defense Agency, might be a front for extraterrestrials, a portal to the Astral Domain, or both. The Dreamstream, composed of the unconscious thoughts of all sentient beings, is home to Soul Leeches and Guilt Eaters. Adventurers on vacation might drop by Club Freak, a nightspot created by the Club Freak, a nightspot created by the Wightnight Press), has designed and edited nearly 50 products. The use of the name of any product other than TSR, Inc. Most product names are trademarks owned by the companies publishing those products. The use of the name of any product without mention of its trademark status should not be construed as a challenge to such status.

In part two, a provocative look at druidic magic featuring shapeshifter duels, enchanted beads called Snakestones, and "letter" spells derived from the Ogham alphabet. I'm not convinced a Celts campaign is worth the trouble, but incorporating the druidic material into another setting — say, GURPS Camelot or GURPS Imperial Rome — could be mighty interesting.

Quest for the Grail, by Ian Hense, David F. Nalle, Paul Reeves, and Richard Trainham. Stone Ring Games, $8.25 (54-card starter deck).

From the sludge pit of collectible card games emerges this gem, a stylish take on the legend of King Arthur. Each player begins by dividing his cards — which boast smart text and exquisite artwork — into two decks. The Court Deck consists of Kings, Knights, Rewards, Events, Domains, and Companions. The Quest Deck comprises a variety of missions and confrontations, such as the hunt for the Faerie Ring and a showdown with the Giant of Arroy. To complete a Quest, the player deploys Knights and Kings, augments them with power points generated by healthy Domains, and hustles for the spells and equipment necessary to thwart the opposition. Successful Quests earn Valor. A Knight whose Valor totals 12 or more may go for the Grail by attempting to overcome three Quests in the same turn; he who captures the Grail wins the game. Notably, Quest for the Grail stresses problem-solving over combat, a refreshing change from the smack-'em-in-the-head approach taken by virtually every other card game on the market. True, Quest requires an annoying number of die-rolls. And true, the card stock is a little thin. But these are incidental quibbles. Quest is a keeper. (Information: Stone Ring Games, Box 17936, Austin, TX 78760.)

Killer Crosshairs, by Jeffrey Barber. Biohazard Games, $10.

The Oddball of the Month Award goes to this curiosity from Missouri which consists of two transparent plastic grids, 14 pages of target silhouettes (men, women, horses, house cats), and about 10 pages of rules. Billed as a "visual targeting system" compatible with most RPGs, Killer Crosshairs enables you to determine with startling precision exactly which body part you hit with a successful attack. It works like this: After making an attack roll, you place a grid on the silhouette that most closely resembles your target. Next, you consult the Systems Conversion section to determine a Crosshairs value that corresponds to your roll; each game system has its own formula (AD&D players use the formula for d20 rolls). You count off the indicated number of spaces on the grid and — ta-da-a — hey, you shot that arrow right down his throat! It's quick, accurate, and disturbingly realistic; I, for one, could live without knowing whether my axe creased some sucker's skull or whacked him in the crotch. And the system seems to assume that the targets are standing still; wouldn't you need a smaller silhouette for, say, a target who's running away? (Or, more precisely, a series of increasingly smaller silhouettes as the target recedes into the distance? This could get complicated.) But I'm nit-picking. If you're a marksman who absolutely, positively has to know if you skewered that pussy cats paw or just nicked its whiskers, this is a must. (Information: Biohazard Games, 2607 Eastwood Drive #61, Columbia, MO 65202.)

Rick Swan, the author of The Complete Guide to Role-Playing Games (St. Martin's Press), has designed and edited nearly 50 role-playing products. You can write to him at 2620 30th Street, Des Moines, IA 50310. Enclose a self-addressed envelope if you'd like a reply.

* indicates a product produced by a company other than TSR, Inc. Most product names are trademarks owned by the companies publishing those products. The use of the name of any product without mention of its trademark status should not be construed as a challenge to such status.

Is there a new game in town?

Send two review copies (or one copy and a cover flat) of your new games to: "Role-Playing Reviews" c/o DRAGON® Magazine

201 Sheridan Springs Road
Lake Geneva, WI 53147
Sad news for fans of Musketeer-style fencing and swashbuckling: Nightshift Games (Fremont, CA) had planned a new edition of Paul Kidd’s sharp and inventive Lace & Steel* RPG, originally published in the late 1970s by the Australian company TAGG. But in early May, Nightshift president Paul Lidberg said, “With the changes in the market, added to our recent focus on [the Hidden Invasion* RPG], Lace & Steel was no longer something we could do.” Lidberg and Kidd are seeking a new publisher for the game. (Contact: froggod@aol.com)

Internet mailing lists

Many gamers on the Internet discuss their favorite RPGs through e-mail messages sent without charge to a list of fellow fans. If you have e-mail, you can subscribe to these free mailing lists and join the discussion.

Two warnings: Popular mailing lists can flood you with hundreds of messages a day, so be ready; and lists, like everything on the Internet, appear and vanish unpredictably. A current “list of lists” is available on the Web at www.mcs.com/~duff/rpg/list_of_lists.html.

Subscribing to a list

There are several types of lists, each with its own subscription method. All the lists below are automated “listserv” lists. To subscribe to a listserv list, send an e-mail message to its server computer as follows:

1. Find the name of the list you want. The list name is everything before the @ symbol; the address comes after.
2. Don’t send subscription requests to that address! Instead, replace everything before the “@” with listserv and send your request to that address.
3. Leave the subject line of your message blank. Write the message in this format: SUBSCRIBE <list name> <your real name>
4. The first message you receive will tell you how to post a message to the list, how to “unsubscribe,” and other important details. Save that message for later reference!

Austin freelancer Allen Varney has designed 15 role-playing supplements and contributed to 20 more, most recently the Feng Shui scenario collection Marked for Death.
Send news to APVarney@aol.com.

Remember the SASE!

When requesting writer’s guidelines, making an article proposal, submitting a completed manuscript, or sending us any other mail that requires a response, always include a large, self-addressed, stamped envelope. If you are writing from outside the U.S., enclose an International Reply Coupon instead of stamps.
It is the dawn of the sixth Holy Millenium. The grand Second Republic has long since fallen and the devastation of the Emperor Wars, although at an end, still hangs heavy in the memories of all. But a new leader emerged victorious from the flames, a new emperor whose call for exploration amid the darkening stars has been heard.

The Noble Houses know who built the empire: they did, with sword and laser. Although the emperor comes from their own ranks, many feel he does not have their interests at heart; these conspirators would depose him. Still others have joined his cause as knights on crusade, reclaiming lost worlds and fighting back the barbarians of the outer frontier.

The Universal Church wishes the Emperor to learn his true place. They seek a return to the time after the Fall of the Second Republic when they led humanity away from the evils of technological and immoral excess.
The Merchant League understands all too well what a strong Emperor means to their trade. He can be both good or bad for business depending on how near they keep him.

Humans are not alone. Aliens exist within and without the Known Worlds. Those beyond the borders of the Empire are strange and unfathomable, and deadly if angered. Races who reached the stars before humanity walked upright still exist out there, in the dark between the stars.

_Fading Suns™_ is a science fiction roleplaying game of heavy combat, vicious politics, weird occultism, alien secrets and artifacts, and unknown and un-mapped worlds. And all the while the mystery of the fading suns hangs over all. _Fading Suns™_ features over 280 pages of background, rules and adventures and will be available in August. For more information, visit our website  WWW.HOLISTIC-DESIGN.COM.
NEW FOR JULY

Spellfire®: Master the Magic Card Game 4th Edition
This 500-card edition combines the best of previous editions, including out-of-print boosters. This edition also presents new and more challenging rules designed for both tournament and family play.

$9.95 U.S./$14.95 CAN./£6.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 1127
ISBN: 0-7869-02108

I, Tyrant
An AD&D® Monstrous Arcana™ accessory
by Aaron Allston
Beholders wield tremendous magical power and hate even their own kind. I, Tyrant explores the realms of these monsters and covers their culture and the twisted goals and motivations that make them the scourge of civilization.

$18.00 U.S./$23.00 CAN./£10.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 9521
ISBN: 0-7869-04046

Eye of Pain
An AD&D Monstrous Arcana adventure
by Thomas Reid
The heroes must venture into an uncharted, subterranean realm in search of a legendary “eye tyrant,” with only a handful of clues and the testimony of a corpse to guide them. The first of a beholder trilogy

$7.95 U.S./$10.00 CAN./£4.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 9522
ISBN: 0-7869-04054

Defilers and Preservers: The Wizards of Athas
A Dark Sun® accessory
by Nicky Rea
This accessory provides new proficiencies, character kits, spells, and vital information on these two unique wizards of Athas. Also included is the new storm mage class of wizards.

$15.95 U.S./$19.95 CAN./£9.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 2445
ISBN: 0-7869-0383X

Volo’s Guide to the Dalelands
A Forgotten Realms® accessory
by Ed Greenwood
The Dalelands are home to such notables as Shadowdale, Elminster, the Ruins of Myth Drannor, and the Zhentarim. Vole takes us on one of his chatty and amusing tours of the area by providing bits of gossip and information as only Vole knows how!

$14.95 U.S./$18.95 CAN./£9.50 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 9524
ISBN: 0-7869-04062

Hellbound: The Blood War
A Planescape™ accessory & adventure
by Colin McComb & Monte Cook
This boxed set contains an adventure that plunges the heroes into the Blood War and reveals shocking information about the fiends, their origins, and their struggle to reign over all things. It also includes a Blood War comic lavishly illustrated by Tony DiTerlizzi and Robh Ruppel.

$25.00 U.S./$32.00 CAN./£15.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 2621
ISBN: 0-7869-04070

Death Unchained
A Ravenloft® adventure
by Lisa Smedman
In this, the first part of an adventure trilogy, mysterious deaths of famous champions of light, and powerful minions of dark in the lands of Dementlieu have reached epidemic scales. The Ebon Fold is behind this grim harvest that may change the realm forever.

$12.95 U.S./$16.95 CAN./£7.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 9523
ISBN: 0-7869-04089
Knights of the Rose
A DRAGONLANCE® novel
by Roland Green
The third quest of Sir Pirvan the wayward culminates in his rise to the status of Knight of the Rose. As more Knights of Solamnia become corrupt, Sir Pirvan once again walks the fine line between his personal codes of honor and duty.
TSR Product No.: 8370
ISBN: 0-7869-05026

Cormyr: A Novel
A FORGOTTEN REALMS hardcover
by Ed Greenwood & Jeff Grubb
When King Azoun IV falls prey to assassins, the past holds the clues to events to come in this sweeping historical novel about the land of Cormyr and its generations of mighty wizards and kings.
TSR Product No.: 8572
ISBN: 0-7869-05034

Runes of Autumn
A TSR novel
by Larry & Robert Elmore
From the creative mind of fantasy artist Larry Elmore comes this tale of old and new magic working together to fight an ancient evil.
TSR Product No.: 8256
ISBN: 0-7869-05042

NEW FOR AUGUST

The Feral
DRAGON DICE™ Kicker Pack 4
by Bill Slavicsek
The Feral combine the mental faculties of mankind with the bestial nature of some of the fiercest creatures of Esfah.
$6.95 U.S./$10.95 CAN./£4.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 1504
ISBN: 0-7869-04674

Sages and Specialists
An AD&D accessory
by Matt Forbeck
The tome details crucial NPCs and presents new rules to use in any campaign world. These sages and specialists are unique in that they can grow and develop with the player characters.
$20.00 U.S./$26.00 CAN./£11.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 2164
ISBN: 0-7869-04100

A Hero’s Tale
An AD&D adventure
by Monte Cook
The shorter adventures contained in this volume are longer than encounters but brief enough to be played in a single evening and require little preparation.
$12.95 U.S./$16.95 CAN./£7.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 9534
ISBN: 0-7869-04402

Savage Coast™ Campaign Book
An AD&D ODYSSEY™ SAVAGE COAST rulebook
by Tim Beach & Bruce Heard
Swashbuckling for AD&D! This campaign book features new rules, character races, classes and proficiencies and detail the history, peoples, and lands of the Savage Coast where the legacies of the Red Curse leave no one untouched.
$25.00 U.S./$32.00 CAN./£15.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 2521
ISBN: 0-7869-03791

DUNGEON® Adventures # 60
Cover by Jim Holloway
❖ Shards of the Day by Randy Maxwell (AD&D® Adventure)
❖ Nemesis by Christopher Perkins (Planescape™ Adventure)
❖ And more!
$4.95 U.S./$5.95 CAN./£1.95 U.K.
TSR Product No. 8200-07

DRAGON® Magazine #232
Weapons Great & Small
Cover by Robh Ruppel
❖ Sorcerous Sixguns or How To Totally Screw Up Your Fantasy Campaign by Roger E. Moore
❖ Weapons of the Waves by Rich Baker
❖ Also featuring magical armor, helms, shields, battering rams, and more!
$4.95 U.S./$5.95 CAN./£2.95 U.K.
TSR Product No. 8133-08

Customer Service Lines
If you have a brief question about TSR’s products, call the Consumer Services and Store Locator phone lines: 1 (414) 248-2902. To find the store nearest you that carries TSR products, call: 1 (800) 384-4TSR.
Naval Battle System
A BIRTHRIGHT® rules supplement by Rich Baker

This supplement features the Naval Battle System from the Cities of the Sun campaign expansion. Included are war cards of Cerilian ships, a battle mat, and counters to resolve naval battles.
$10.95 U.S./$15.95 CAN./£7.50 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 3134
ISBN: 0-7869-06286

Heroes’ Lorebook
A FORGOTTEN REALMS accessory by Dale Donovan & Paul Culotta

This is the definitive book of game statistics for every hero featured in the Realms — including Elminster, Drizzt, and King Azoun — provides everything DMs need to introduce these characters into new or existing campaigns.
$20.00 U.S./$26.00 CAN./£11.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 9525
ISBN: 0-7869-04127

The New Adventures of FAFHRD™ and the GRAY MOUSE™
A LANKHMAR™ campaign setting by Shane Hensley

Discover fast-action, intrigue-filled adventures Fritz Leiber style! This campaign setting is a new approach to one of the world’s best-loved fantasy settings and includes a quick synopsis of the AD&D core rules. The boxed set includes a rulebook, DM™ guide, poster map, and short adventures.
$25.00 U.S./$32.00 CAN./£15.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 1144
ISBN: 0-7869-04178

Death Ascendant
Grim Harvest Series #2 by Lisa Smedman

The Ebon Fold’s web of intrigue spreads as the master reaps the artifacts of Darkness and prepares to proclaim himself emperor of Terrors. For character levels 6-9.
$12.95 U.S./$16.95 CAN./£7.99 U.K.
TSR Product No.: 9526
ISBN: 0-7869-04143

Cast of Fate
DRAGON DICE Book #1 by Allen Varney

Adventure along with a young lava elf raised by coral elves as he resolves the conflicts of his heritage in land forever at war.
TSR Product No.: 1508
ISBN: 0-7869-05107

The Black Vessel
A SAVAGE COAST novel by Morris Simon

A powerful wizard and his warrior allies race against time and treachery to unlock the secrets of an ancient statue. What deadly key to the forgotten past and the mysterious Red Curse does it hold?
TSR Product No.: 2519
ISBN: 0-7869-05077

The Mage in the Iron Mash
A FORGOTTEN REALMS novel by Brian Thomsen

The master traveler Volo uncovers a decades-old conspiracy that jeopardizes the uneasy peace Between the Moonsea, Thay and the rest of Faerûn.
TSR Product No.: 8563
ISBN: 0-7869-05069

Passage to Dawn
A FORGOTTEN REALMS hardcover by R.A. Salvatore

Drizzt and Catti-Brie’s new life of freedom aboard the Sea Sprite is threatened when a doppleganger, a mysterious poem, and a miscast spell result in a return to Icewind Dale where they first discovered the deadly crystal shard!
TSR Product No.: 8571
ISBN: 0-7869-04895

Unless otherwise noted: ® designates registered trademarks owned by TSR, Inc.
™ designates trademarks owned by TSR, Inc.
©1995 TSR, Inc. All Rights Reserved.
Dicemaster

AN EXCITING NEW COLLECTIBLE DICE GAME SERIES

COMING THIS SUMMER

FROM IRON CROWN ENTERPRISES, INC. AND HOBBYGAMES, LTD

Copyright © 1996 Iron Crown Enterprises, Inc. (USA) and Hobbygames, Limited (UK). The “Burning Die,” Dicemaster, and all icons and images used therein, are trademark properties of Iron Crown Enterprises (ICE) and Hobbygames. All rights reserved.
Battletech card game rescued

After a narrow brush with death, the long-planned Battletech trading card game from Wizards of the Coast (WotC; Seattle) is proceeding. WotC licensed card-game rights to the popular board game from FASA Corporation (Chicago) in late 1993. After two years of indifferent progress, involving three different designs by half a dozen people at WotC and FASA, WotC informed FASA in March that it was cancelling the game. But then WotC designer Richard Garfield, who was not previously involved in the project, rescued it by taking on design duties himself. The game is now in beta testing, and the company hopes to publish it this fall.

Since Garfield has gotten involved, “Support for this project at all levels of the company is absolutely incredible, from the president’s office to the guys in the mail room,” says project leader Ron Richardson. Other than Jonathan Tweet’s Everway game (now taken over by Pagan Publishing) and Peter Adkison’s Falkenstein game (now taken over by Hero Games products). In June, Hero/R. Talsorian publishing deal (Contact: herogames@aol.com, rtg1@best.com; Web: www.herogames.com) — reflects WotC’s new effort to produce games more efficiently. Aside from several foreign editions of the Magic game, six issues of The Duelist, and various newsletters, WotC (which employs well over 200 people) published 13 products in the last 12 months: three Magic expansions, the Netrunner and Everway games, new editions of the Vampire and Roborally games plus one expansion for each, and four books. For the balance of 1996 WotC has announced the Battletech game, four card-game expansions, one book, and more Magic foreign editions, including Chinese and Korean.

SLA Industries: In late April WotC sold its SLA Industries RPG (cancelled last December with the other WotC role-playing lines) to a startup company, Jageeda Publishing. Company principals include Matt Murray (dboy@wizards.com), Katherine Sifers, Brian “Chippy” Dugan, and SLA Industries designer Dave Alsop. WotC took over the game in 1994 with the purchase of its original publisher, Nightfall Games, but produced only three supplements.

(Continued on page 113)

© 1996 Allen Varney

Bruce Harlick remains as Hero line editor. The first Hero product from RTG, due this fall, will be a new edition of the Champions game. According to co-designer Steve Peterson, “The new edition of Champions will be primarily a campaign book; it will not include the full Hero System rules nor the genre book* of the current 4th edition. “The new Champions will mostly describe the history, characters, stories, and technology of the campaign; it will also include the basic Hero rules in extremely brief form.” This form, nicknamed “Instant Hero,” is a truncated introductory version of the Hero System rules. In contrast to the elaborate writeups of the full rules, an Instant Hero character’s statistics fit on a trading card.

Peterson says, “The new campaign will have some familiar names from the past, but everything else is new: the history, the backgrounds, origins, powers, and costumes. The 5th Edition of the Hero System rules — the complete set of rules for creating characters, powers, running combat, etc. — will come out some time next year.”

As announced in DRAGON Magazine issue #229, Gold Rush Games (Elk Grove, CA) retains its license to publish Hero sourcebooks and adventures.

(Continued on page 113)

Notes from the field

Ronin Publishing, a new company in Boston, has acquired The Whispering Vault game, the 1994 RPG originally released by Pariah Press. Designed by Mike Nystul (immortalized in the AD&D® game as the creator of Nystul’s magic aura), WV is an offbeat and stylish game of supernatural horror. Ronin comprises freelancer Chris Pramas (who worked on the original game), his brother Jason, and Neal Darcy. Ronin’s support plans for WV include supplements called Mortal Magic and Book of Hunts. (Contact: RoninP@aol.com)
Dragonlance™
Fifth Age™
Dramatic Adventure Game

The Story has Just Begun...

It is an ancient world with ancient troubles. The last four Great Ages have defined Epic Struggle on Ansalon. Now the gods have left Krynn, and humans must fight the Great Dragon Overlords to survive. The new Epic Struggle has begun.

The Dragonlance™: Fifth Age™ Dramatic Adventure Game is an entirely new narrative role-playing system. The versatile SAGA™ Rules System and Fate cards give the players more power over the game than ever before. The easy hero generation and conflict resolution make learning the system easy. And the continuing epic of Krynn makes the game irresistible.

Ages come, Ages go. And with each comes new challenges. Krynn's history has come to a blank page, and it is your Destiny to fill it. Make your mark with confidence, for it will be remembered in Legend.

SAGA

To find the store nearest you call toll-free 1-800-384-4TSR. Questions? Call Rob Taylor at 414-248-2902.

©1996 TSR, Inc. All rights reserved.

* and ™ designate trademarks owned by TSR, Inc.
BERK BE NIMBLE

The Planewalker's Handbook is more valuable than eyes in the back of your head. Get it. Read it. Remember it.

If you're ready to survive in worlds of extremes, if you're ready to explore where raw power lies within your grasp, you're ready for the Planescape™ campaign.

But watch your step.

---

The Planewalker's Handbook
TSR #2520
Sup. Retail $20.00;
CAN $26.00; £11.99 U.K.
ISBN 0-7869-0460-7

Planescape Campaign Setting
TSR #2580
Sup. Retail $20.00;
CAN $24.00; £23.50 U.K.
ISBN 1-56076-834-7

Monstrous Compendium
Planescape Appendix I
TSR #2602
Sup. Retail $16.00;
CAN $22.00; £10.99 U.K.
ISBN 1-56076-852-0

Monstrous Compendium
Planescape Appendix II
TSR #2613
Sup. Retail $15.00;
CAN $23.00; £10.99 U.K.

---

Dungeons & Dragons

FANTASY . . . TAKEN TO THE EDGE®

To find the store nearest you call 1-800-My-DTREAS. Questions? Call P.B. Taylor at 901-546-2562.

© and ™ designate trademarks owned by TSR, Inc. Stirling, TSR, Inc. VII are registered.